

Receivers could key U-M attack

Rogers' absence at running back — combined with a knee injury suffered by back-up Brian Mercer last season that kept him out of spring practice — leaves precious little experience at tailback. Rogers' fate won't be decided until his summer grades are evaluated Sept. 5 — two days before U-M's opener against Washington.

THAT MEANS Rogers will miss two weeks, at least (he isn't practicing with the starters at present). Ben Logue (13 carries for 85 yards) is the lone returning back with game experience. Gerald White and Thomas Wilcher will also see action.

The receiving corps will be relied on to pick up the slack. Bean is certain they can fill the role.

"This is the most talent we've had at wide receiver, depth-wise, since I've been here," said Bean, who started earlier All-American Anthony Carter for two seasons. Triando Markray is the incumbent at flanker. Markray blossomed late last year, catching 11 passes for a whopping 319 yards (a 29.0 yards-per-catch average) and four TDs. Steve Johnson and Giovanni Johnson are able back-ups.

"He is definitely going to help," Bean said of a more experienced Markray. "Last year people forgot all about Triando. He'd be out there all alone."

THE PLAYER expected to spell Bean at split end won't be overlooked — not at 6-foot-8. Paul Jokisch, a junior from Birmingham Brother Rice, came to Michigan as a basketball player but decided to give football a try last spring. His size makes him an imposing target, but that isn't the limit to his talent.

"I was surprised how good he is,"

Bean said of Jokisch. "He's really competitive and he's got great hands. He's a lot better than I thought he'd be."

Jokisch doesn't know how much playing time he'll get as he gets acclimated to a sport he hasn't played in three years.

"I feel I'll get as good a shot as anybody," said Jokisch. "The first couple weeks of spring ball it was kind of tough, getting used to the pads."

"But I'm ready to get going. We've got a lot of receivers. With a rebuilt backfield, those receivers are going to be needed."
