Motels drawn to Hills

A long-planned facility on 12 Mile Road, just west of Orchard Lake Road. The proposed motel would all between 1-895 and a small strip mall facing 12 Mile Road. Mel Rosenhaus, of Hunters Square and Tully Hall fame, is one of the people behind the proposed motel.

MOTELS AND hotels in Farmington Hills are allowed in the business district and expressway service district.

Proposed motels that have yet to go through the rezoning process are two on the Grand River/M-108 cut-off near Hill Cook Road and another near Eight Mile and Haggerty roads. Rowe said. The one near Eight Mile and Haggerty roads, he said, is expected to be a Sky-lit Inn.

But Cook is a proponent of one of the proposed motels near the Grand River cut-off. Cardinal Industries of Ohio is a proponent for the second proposed facility in that location, Rowe said.

"We're happy to see them (motels)," Rowe said. "Besides the tax base, it brings people in (to the community) and gives people jobs."

JODI SORONEN, council member and executive director of the Farmington-Farmington Hills Chamber of Commerce, agrees.

"It allows you to bring people into the community and have enough rooms to put them up. Then they spend money in the community," she said.

Although Farmington Hills doesn't have a large convention facility, she said, there's always the possibility of the Detroit conventions spilling over into the city. That's particularly true with many corporate headquarters now being built in Farmington Hills.

Bastard Inn on Grand River for one has reported some spill-over from Detroit's conventions, Soronen said.

Many developers are beginning to see Farmington Hills as a "booming area near an exit," she said.

School lists graduates

Some five Farmington area students were among the approximately 385 degree candidates at the University of Michigan-Dearborn last fall. They included: David Kimberberry, Mary Jane Billecke, Barbara Cardwell, Ann Marie Cassar and Shelby Elaine Smith.

During commencement ceremonies Dec. 9, undergraduate and graduate recipients were presented degrees by the donor of their respective academic units.
