2 hills houses called historic

Two more historic houses in Farmington Hills have been added to the Michigan Register of Historic Places by the Michigan Historical Commission.

They are Eber Durham House, 35855 13 Mile and the Stephen Jennings House, 26337 Drake.

This brings to 18 the number of sites to be on the state registry from Farmington Hills Historic District, which itself includes 39 properties.

The Eber Durham House, an important example of Greek Revival style, was built about 1845 by Stephen Jennings, an early owner of the Boisford

Inn, on land adjacent to the Inn. It was probably built at the time of Eber Durham's marriage to Jennings' daughter, Jane. The house, it is believed, was a wedding gift of her father. Jane did not live long to enjoy it, dying in 1852.

When Boisford Inn was moved back from Grand River and restored in the 1920s by Henry Ford, his superintendent of construction lived in the Eber Durham House. Because his name was Frank Shaw, the small home for many years was known as the Frank Shaw House.

The second home to be honored with state registry listing is the Stephen

Jennings House on Drake Road. This is a larger, two-story home, built between 1841 and 1852 by Jennings. Located near Boisford Inn, the home at the turn of the century was inhabited by Milton and Lovinia Boisford while running the Inn. Their son, Frank Boisford, lived with his family at the Inn.

The early home, also an example of Michigan Greek Revival architecture, was built on logs with bark still on them, still visible in the basement. The house has a narrow enclosed stairway, also typical of the period.

Both homes are part of the Farmington Hills Historic District.
