Visual litness includes several vision skills

In the wake of 198t Olympic games, literally thousands of Americans of all ages and abilities swamed to health clubs, gyms, classes and local sport clubs, gyms, classes and local sport centers.

Interest in sports achievement and physical fitness hit an a lime high. Six months and a year labr, youngsters and adults still benefit from an emphasis on physical fitness.

In a Save Your Vilion Week message, Dr. Joseph D. Cinder, president of the Michigan Optimetric Association, stresses that "winsi fitness" can be as important as physical fitness when individuals take part in competitive sports.

"Visual fitness includes a number of interrelated vision skills, from the abiliterrelated vision skills, from the a fitness through exercise and practice, there are ways to improve visual fitness as well," Ceinder said.

Optometrists point out that almost everyone can improve sports skills by practicing systematically visualizing of their goal while using their eyes to concentrate on the ball. The phrase "concentrate on the ball," should be interpreted as "visually concentrate on tyour goal" whether it be the distance of a pass, the direction of a hit or the speed of an approaching ball.
Doctors of optometry, who specialize in sports vision, work with athletes recommending the proper prescription lenses and/or design programs of vision training to maximize visual skills to improve performance. By seeding thorough optometric care on a regular bias, abla team take a step toward last the quality of other aspects of their lives affected by vision.
