Army hosts national Boy Scout Jamboree

Last year it was the Olympics. This year it's the National Boy Scout Jamboree, when the U.S. Army will host 30,000 Boy Scouts from 50 states and many foreign countries July 24-30.

While at Fort A.P. Hill in Virginia the scouts will live an experience they'll be recounting the rest of their lives. Their days will be full of trading and swapping and their nights full of song and tales told around bonfires.

Seven hundred soldiers are now preparing the Jamboree site for the Scouts. U.S. Army personnel are erecting tents, installing latrine and shower facilities, digging the trenches for 20,000 feet of water pipeline, and laying miles of wire that will carry the electricity to light the Jamboree site at night.

During the Jamboree, Army medical personnel will be standing by to handle everything from a splinter to a splint, and helicopters will be on the ground ready to evacuate anyone in need of emergency medical care.
