Hospital offers free heartsaver classes

A course in CPR can save a life. CPR means cardiopulmonary resuscitation. It is used to revive a person and keep him alive, by ensuring that the heart continues pumping oxygen-carrying blood to the brain. CPR must be performed continuously until professional help can take over treatment. After four to six minutes without oxygen, the brain may suffer permanent damage, even if the victim survives. Knowing CPR could help save the life of a victim of heart attack, electric shock, suffocation, drug overdose, an auto accident or someone pulled from the water and close to drowning.

Holy Cross Hospital is offering "Heartsaver" classes at 7 p.m. the first Monday of each month. The three-hour class offers information on lifestyles which are high-risk for cardiac disease, symptoms of heart attack, and instructions in one-man CPR. The hospital will offer supervised, hands-on practice of the life-saving skill on training manikins. The certified CPR instructors are planning a 10-1 student-faculty ratio, so class size is limited to early registrations.

Contact the hospital's Community Relations at 369-9100, Ext. 2308 to register.

INSTRUCTORS will provide information identifying when CPR is necessary, teaching participants the signs to watch for when a victim isn't breathing, when there is inadequate blood circulation, how to check for a pulse and how to revive the victim. An explanation of why proper CPR skills are important, not only to save a life but to reduce the possibility of complications, will be included.

Gleaners Food Bank

Gleaners supports a staff of 20 paid employees. Harrington, who left Sears after a 35-year career, says he took a 34 percent pay cut to work at Gleaners.

He credits the food bank's success to its founders, former Jesuit Brother Gene Gonyea and a Drayton Plains couple, Al and Midge Feliks. The three friends came up with idea of Gleaners in response to their perception of the growing hunger problem.

The food bank took off when they met J. E. "Bud" Stedman, staff specialist for the Greater Detroit Chamber of Commerce's Food Industry Council. Stedman steered them away from their initial impulse to have church groups collect food for distribution. Rather, he convinced them to create a central distribution agency whereby food dealers could unload unwanted cargo.

LAST YEAR, 25 percent of the food distributed by Gleaners came from Second Harvest, a national food bank clearinghouse in Chicago. The rest came from farmers and local distributors, including the Livonia-based Awrey Bakeries, General Foods, Kroger on Middlebelt, Leone and Sons, NorQuick Distributing, Sexton Dairy, the Keebler Co. in Redford Township, the A&P Country Oven and Something Different in Westland, P&S Distributors in Canton, the Huron River Hunt Club in Farmington, Viasic Foods in West Bloomfield and Yurika Foods in Birmingham.

To qualify for the surplus food, receiving agencies must be non-profit and distribute food packages or serve free meals to the needy, ill or infants. This year it is projected that Gleaners will dispense 4.8 million pounds of food.

"We're not as well known as the Catholic Fathers or the Salvation Army, but among the people who know us, we are very well respected," Harrington said.

GLEANERS BROADENED its food program in the wake of the General Motors/UAW Care and Share program, a highly successful food distribution program it organized for the automaker last Christmas.

"After that program was terminated, we found that there was still a need for box food program so we created our Pantry Pack," Harrington said. "Our agencies can buy this box which includes 45 pounds of canned and dried foods for $15.75. To buy the same food over the counter would cost $30."

Each box contains food for 47 nutritionally balanced meals with no need for immediate refrigeration. Juice, canned soup, vegetables, tuna, pasta rice and beans are included. Gleaners keeps a 2,000-box inventory on hand. Clients include agencies from as far away as Lansing, Flint and northern Ohio.

Gleaning food isn't an easy task, although the efficiently run Gleaners makes it look that way.

A FULL-TIME food solicitor and part-time assistant spend each day contacting companies. Gonyea, who serves as Gleaners president, promotes public awareness of the program by making the rounds of public meetings in the hopes that his connections will result in more food reaching more hungry people.

Cash contributions — which are used for capital expenditures such as buildings or truck maintenance — are also accepted. The address is Gleaners Food Bank, 2151 Beaufort, Detroit 48207.

At the end of the training session, participants who have successfully demonstrated the basic one-man CPR technique will receive an American Heart Association of Michigan "Heartsaver Card." Holy Cross Hospital provides these monthly classes at no charge.

Gerald E. Moore, president of Holy Cross Hospital, says "We want to work together with people in our communities helping them recognize the early signs of a heart attack and how to respond. That's why we feel it's very important that people take advantage of our CPR classes. In case of cardiac arrest, CPR must be started immediately to possibly save the life and prevent extensive brain damage. In offering CPR at Holy Cross our goal is to save lives by training people, making them rescuers within their own families and neighborhoods."

Holy Cross, a voluntary, non-profit hospital, is a member facility of Franciscan Services Corp., Sisters of St. Francis, Sylvania, Ohio. Holy Cross is a 365-bed acute care facility which has served the people of northeast Detroit and Macomb County for 40 years. Holy Cross is at 4771 E. Outer Drive, just east of Van Dyke.
