

Coat shapes worth warming to

THERE IS AN entire new segment of American women who are going to fall in love with cooler weather this year. These are the women we call serious coat collectors. The coats in store for them this fall are strong shouldered, mostly narrow in shape, sometimes full-skirted, and almost always very feminine. And they come in a most exclusive variety of fabrics and furs.

The big wonderful looks include bold versions of the classic polo or camel's hair coat that sweep below the calf. Richer and grander versions of the narrow dress coat are layered with luxurious fur lining that sweeps about the upper torso to provide the deepest collaring in years. Reminiscent of Edwardian England, imperial Russia and the Raj, pataleys frankly emulate lengthened versions of the smoking jacket. Daytime and evening tapestry wrap coats are detailed with deep collaring and festoons of silk cording. Opulence is everywhere.

WHETHER HIP-length, 7/8-length, or cut off at the ankle, the elegant Chesterfield steps out in new brights with shiny gold buttons, or it smolders in deep shades that invite smokey pataley accessories.

The season's emphasis on texture and design is a point not lost on the fur industry, which has been sheering up for its own imaginative interpretations of the enriched look. Fur coats emphasize the attention to shape and proportion that has gone into dresses, suits, pants and evening wear.

Like their wool contemporaries furs sweep to the ankle, rest at ease at the 7/8-length, brush the top of the leg just below above-the-knee skirt lengths. The styles are so versatile and fun they are equally at home over narrow skirts, pants and dresses for daytime and simply fantastic over the nighttime dazzlers.

Black and turquoise wool take new shapes under the talented hand of Mrs. H. Winter. Seven-eighths length, wool melton coat, $835, over complementary wool knit dress, $485. Roz & Sherm, Bloomfield Plaza.

One of the season's great coats, bold shapes in white, black and sable, $1,000. By Castelbajac. Roz & Sherm.
