

No reason to drop out

Services at Marillac now open to teen-age mothers in community

By Loraine McCleish
staff writer

Unmarried teen-agers who are pregnant or have a baby may now take advantage of services offered by Marillac Hall and the St. Vincent-Sarah Fisher Center without becoming residents of either facility.

"We can easily accommodate twice the number we now have in class," said Rose Govig, head of the adult education department for Clarenceville Schools.

"The girls who choose to live with their parents would be coming to classes on a regular school schedule to a good setting with a good staff, and there are no geographical boundaries. They can live anywhere, continue their education, get help with decision making. We want to make it as comfortable and as beneficial as it can be for all single adolescent mothers.

"There is no reason for any interruption of school for any of these girls, no reason to drop out. We have such a good program and so much to offer we want to offer all of our services to all those who need them," Govig said.

Govig's job, in concert with Farmington Public Schools, involves testing for General Education Diplomas (GED) and overseeing adult education classes in nursing homes within the two areas, as well as classes at Marillac.

At Marillac, "adult education" goes beyond finishing high school and getting a diploma.

"THE TEEN-AGE mother, whether waiting for her baby or after delivery, is uncomfortable about going back to her old school," said Sister Kathryn Mary, director of the home for unwed mothers on Inkster and 12 Mile, Farmington Hills.

"Going to school here, meeting the girls who are living here, being with others in the same situation is a big factor in just reducing the stress. I don't think any of us who haven't experienced it can really imagine what it's like to be 16 years old and alone and pregnant."

"I don't believe it is healthy to stay in isolation. The camaraderie is a big help, and there are many services we have they can take advantage of," she said.

"All of the teens who live here must go to school. That's a requirement for staying here whether they are finishing high school, going to vocational school or Oakland Community College," said Sister Kathryn Mary. "We offer a program throughout the year as well as Independence from their old school system."

The school program includes counseling, the availability of social workers and a support group for the teens' parents.

THE YOUNG mothers are also offered sessions in parenting, prenatal and postnatal health care, information on drugs and smoking, and periodic sessions "on whatever else comes up. There is really a wealth of information to be had that every girl in that situation can use," Sister Kathryn Mary said.

Marillac houses about 25 girls at a time. About 15-20 of those attend school on site. Others are bused to classes in the community.

Some teens, who have given birth, opt to live with their baby in small cottages within the complex and can do so for a year. Their education and counseling continues.

Govig and Sister Kathryn Mary said the idea to open up the services to teen-age mothers in the community was a spontaneous one that occurred to them both at about the same time.

Interested persons are invited to call Marillac Hall, 626-1707, and ask for the intake worker on duty between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays.

Optimist's lines have upward slant

Dear Ms. Green:

I have experienced a number of dramatic changes in my life over the past few years and have noted corresponding changes in my handwriting—especially in my "end-strokes." I will be fascinated with any insights you offer. It may be helpful to note that I am 34 years of age, right handed and female. Thank you for your time and for a consistently interesting column.

Dear V.L.:

Your unique handwriting style points up a success-oriented person. The admirable quality of optimism (up slanted lines) tells me you are also a young woman who consistently looks on the bright side of things. The high degree of optimism has to include faith
