

Michigan Has Strong Anti-Pollution Laws

Michigan's anti-pollution laws are among the strongest in the nation. Our Water Resources Management Act makes it unlawful for any person to discharge, directly or indirectly, into the waters of the state any substance which either is or may become harmful to the land, wildlife, public health, or industrial or commercial uses of the land. The act is enforced by Water Resources Commission inspectors and by the attorney general. Any duly appointed agent of the commission has the right to enter at all reasonable times upon public or private property to inspect for water pollution. After the commission gives notice of a violation, any person who fails to comply with its order is subject to a criminal complaint and a penalty of $500 a day for, every day during which the violation occurred. The Michigan Air Pollution Act makes the State Air Pollution Control Commission responsible for establishing standards and rules governing discharge of air contaminants. The commission has established regulations which provide, in part, that anyone planning to construct a facility which may cause air pollution must submit his plans to the commission for approval. Any gaseous or particle emissions which flow, untreated, into the atmosphere, must meet the standards established by the commission. Upon complaint that its standards are being violated, the commission must hold a public hearing to determine whether a violation has occurred. Upon such a determination, the commission issues an order and accepts a plan for correction of the problem.

Every citizen can contribute to a cleaner environment by checking his own facilities for possible pollution and by reporting violations to the Water Resources Commission or the Air Pollution Control Commission in Lansing.
