Making sculpture an

LINDA GOLDEN's strengths in fine arts and interior design were a winning combination for a home she recently completed. Her clients, both professionals with one child, wanted more than a nice home in good taste; they wanted a one-of-a-kind contemporary environment that would create, at the least, a mild sensation. They wanted to keep some of the furniture from their former traditional home, add some outstanding contemporary art and make the new home as automated as possible. This is the sort of challenge that Golden finds refreshing. The immediate attention grabber on the two-story wall of the living room, easily seen from the foyer as well as the upstairs balcony, is a colorful metal sculpture by Florida artist Frank Farmer. Farmer himself came to install the work, which is thin aluminum strips in a variety of shapes and colors, all painted a luminescent orange on the underside to produce a glow. Since this is the piece de resistance, Golden had her clients' traditional furniture recovered in cream of varying textures — nice idea if you can get them all to match, which she did. The large area rug, an abstract design with brush strokes of burgundy, teal black and pink on a creamy gray background, is an exciting floor treatment. On the fireplace wall opposite the

The feeling of flow begins in the entry area and continues through the great room and dining room. Interior designer Linda Golden said the use of a limited number of natural materials contributes to that. The Frank Farmer sculpture on the wall of the great room and the custom rug bring drama and excitement to the environment.
