

Age Of Maturity Leaders Named

Gov. William G. Milliken has announced the creation of a Special Commission on the Age of Maturity to develop a new legal approach to the rights and responsibilities of youth.

The governor named District Judge Frank Millner, of Cadillac, chairman of the commission and Martin Taylor, deputy director of the Michigan Department of Commerce, as vice chairman.

The governor acknowledged the influence of an Observer Newspapers "White Paper" which first suggested the need for re-defining "maturity" and revising all state laws specifying an age of maturity.

"THERE IS A critical need to redefine the legal rights and responsibilities of young people in our society," Milliken said.

"Young people today are increasingly insisting on greater freedom, and greater participation in our political and economic life. I believe society must respond by providing greater rights for young people, but rights coupled with greater responsibility.

"The present laws of this state, in many ways, protect young people by denying them freedoms and opportunities open to others. These laws place responsibility on parents and on society generally, a responsibility that is too often unmet by either parents or society.

"The commission I am creating today will investigate the wide range of issues involved in such a sweeping revision of the laws.

"The commission cannot change the law, it can only recommend. It will be up to the Michigan Legislature, and ultimately the Michigan public, to decide the directions in which our state will move."
