

Variations point to individuality

Dear Mrs. Green:

I am a 46-year-old right-handed female hoping your handwriting analysis can help me determine an area of concentration for career development. I recently took a Strong-Campbell Vocational Interest Test which indicated my interests lie in the fields of broadcasting, public relations, social work, personnel and travel agent — with a very high basic interest in public speaking.

This test seems accurate enough, as I have considered most of the above.

What does my handwriting indicate in support of ability to communicate creatively and effectively? This seems to me to be the common denominator. I have always had a desire to write.

Can you help with an analysis in terms of suitability of temperament, etc? I would appreciate your perspective.

Thank you.

J.R.,

Dear J.R.:

Checking the gestalt picture of your handwriting, I find a strong strain of creativity woven throughout. This individuality is noted in your departure from copybook handwriting, small size, many legible letter simplifications, and a variety of connections between the letters.

Your unique handwriting definitely confirms results of the Strong-Campbell Vocational Interest Test. The field of communications is indeed where your talents could be used most effectively. Do not stifle your desire to write as literary aptitude is highly visible.

Superior intellect and a probing mind propel you into interesting experiences and situations. You have been exposed to both culture and education.

Good concentration is further noted as is awareness of details and accuracy. You prefer to zero in on one thing at a time and dislike distractions and outside interference. You are ever seeking efficient and expedient ways to get things accomplished. System and order are an integral part of your daily life.

THE MAJORITY of your goals are set at a high level of challenge. And optimism and confidence ride on many of them. You are able to work alone and do not rely on others for your success.

A facility with words provides tact as you handle the give and take of daily interaction. You are often direct, however, and can call a spade a spade. Still there is empathy, and you can feel with and for others. But your mind usually rules you heart in the end. Decisions are often predicated on how they will affect you personally. Between yourself and others you place some distance and feel a need to be in control of relationships.

A need to be independent and autonomous started at a young age. Some dislike of authority figures is noted here. This probably began when you fought the voice of authority in your parental home. Seemingly you have not been entirely successful working through this as some resentment still remains.

You appear to have a business head that allows you to make money with money. Any tips on the market?

As a public service, readers are invited to have their handwriting analyzed. Write to Loren C. Green, a certified graphologist, in care of this newspaper, 2651 Schoenherdt, Livonia, 48150. Use a full sheet of white, unlined paper writing in the first person singular. Age, handedness and signature are all helpful. And feedback is always welcome.

Silver awards earned

Forty five Metro Cadette and Senior Girl Scouts were given their Silver Awards this spring.

Those from Farmington and Farmington Hills given the award were Samantha Cohager, Jennifer Fitzgerald, Paula, Gerard, Jennifer Jacobs, Kelly Pavelich, Amy Solomon and Gena Tabacka, all members of Troop 163.

Those in Troop 146 given the award were Karl Ellsworth, Adrienne Mocello, Suzanne Nagrant and Jessica Osowski.

Volunteer honored

Mary Clancy, a resident of Farmington Place and a longtime Red Cross volunteer, was one of the volunteers honored when North Branch of the American Red Cross hosted its "Awards Tea."

Clancy has worked in the branch's blood bank program for the past 10 years, and for the past three years has been the staffing chairwoman for the blood bank. Her job has been to fill all volunteer positions in all facets of the blood bank program that stem from the branch in Livonia.
