

Hills supports lot's resurfacing

Farmington and Farmington Hills have agreed to help pay for the repaving of the parking lot shared by the 47th District Court and Farmington Public Schools' adult education facility at 10 Mile and Raphael.

Approval is still needed from the Farmington Board of Education, which would pay half the cost, according to an earlier agreement between the three governmental units.

Farmington Hills City Council recommended the repairs Aug. 11, Farmington Aug. 4.

According to a bid submitted by Cadillac Asphalt Paving Co., major repairs are needed on the parking lot, including repairs to a 15,500-square-foot area of the base and leveling and wearing layers of asphalt on approximately 24,500 square feet. Cadillac, already under contract to the school district for other paving jobs, estimates the job will cost $26,975.

Based upon an arrangement between the Farmington Building Authority and the school district, major maintenance or reconstruction costs on the lot are to be shared equally by the school district and the cities.

The parking lot was constructed as part of the conversion of the Ten Mile elementary school into the current facility for the 47th District Court.

The school district's share of the repair bill is $13,487 — half the cost. Farmington Hills share is $11,210; Farmington's is $2,277 — collectively, half the cost. The cities' share is based on the percentage each funds the district court.

Teaching of math draws spotlight

Not all Farmington teachers took a summer vacation during the past few months.

Sixty-nine Farmington teachers attended a weeklong seminar in late July at Beechview Elementary School to learn Mathematics Their Way — a pilot program entering its third year at Farmington Public Schools.

The program serves children from kindergarten-second grade and applies everyday objects to mathematics concepts instead of teaching the concepts on paper.

During the last school year, nine elementary teachers were trained in and used the program.

Farmington's pilot began in September 1984 with 35,000 from the district's curriculum development fund and has been coordinated by Beechview elementary school teacher Becky Alchin.

Alchin plans to give the school board an updated report this year and hopes the district will offer the program as a suggested option for teachers.
