

Channel 12 is providing program diversity

The era of television has been highly influential. At no time has an entire culture been so intimately affected by a technology. The television crosses all the borders of our culture.

The courts are kept on overload, protecting our individual freedoms where television just delivers right into the guts of controversial issues and lays it on the table. Proudly, community television is the arena where there is encouragement of freedom of expression.

We are trying to step up momentum for Channel 12 to trigger the imagination of our television viewing audience by providing programs of interest produced by our friends in other communities.

This project is being facilitated by trading with a sister city for 15 hours of our programming. The programs are selected for "topical diversity," which is not time or location limited. Each will keep the programs for up to three months, then the swap takes place again.

Our goal is to offer our audience a wider content to select from as well as introduce ideas for our producers to elaborate upon.

The special effects that access producers take advantage of are not services bought in a production shop. "Intros" captivate the magnificence of crashing waves upon the shoreline of Oregon, the chirp of the birds as a pair of the woods in northern Michigan, the sparkle of sunbeams peeking over the mountain tops of Denver, the sound of hooves of cattle in Dallas as they are rounded up for the night.

What simple yet exhilarating techniques to share the effect of one's television program idea. We may not live there, but we sure are interested in what they may have to say.
