Preparing pets for cold

Long range weather forecasts call for a cold and snowy winter. Pets can be comfortable and happy during the cold months — if their owners observe a few cold weather rules.

An indoor pet needs only a few extra precautions against cold. His outdoor trips should be of a shorter duration, of course. For extended stays outdoors such as a walk, a coat or sweater may be in order, especially for a short-haired breed. Keep a towel handy to dry him off when he comes inside. Be sure to wipe his feet thoroughly, as rock salt can cause paw irritation.

Outdoor pets are really the ones most affected by the cold. While the Michigan Humane Society discourages the keeping of animals outdoors, we are aware that many of them are outdoor pets. Here are some common sense tips on care for the outdoor pet.

• Be sure that the pet doghouse is in good repair. No leaks or gaps.

• Have the house elevated 4-6 inches off the ground to allow the flooring to dry.

• Have the doorway facing south-east away from prevailing winds.

• Have a flap over the door to keep out drafts.

• Use clean straw as an insulating material and change frequently. Now for the dog himself. As with humans, animals expend more calories keeping themselves warm in cold weather. Therefore, increase the animal's food intake by 15-20 percent during cold weather. Food and water dishes, should be checked frequently and replaced if frozen. When the temperature or wind chill is zero degrees or below, consider bringing the pet inside for the night. Never bring him into a really warm area though, because his heavy coat will make him uncomfortable.

Winter time can be a fun time for pets and people as long as you and your pet are prepared, says the Michigan Humane Society.
