Farmington uses high-tech advances to make city safer

By Casey Hane staff writer

PDATED TECHNOLOGY is bringing better police and fire protection to an atmosphere where seconds can make a life of death difference.

An improved dispatch center was recently completed, paving the way for Oakland County's Enhanced 9-1-1 emergency services scheduled to come on line later this year.

scheduled to come on line later this year.

And for the past six months, an integrated computer/video training system has provided up-to-date techniques for public safety officers in a variety of situations.

Also this year, officers will get mobile data terminals in patrol cars, allowing them to check com-parent to the comparation of the without radion dispatch.

This enhanced technology cost the city of Farmington more than $100,000 for the dispatch central conc. The trading system that in-cludes computer, color monitor, vi-deo recorder, television and printer, cost several thousand doi-lars. The mobile data car terminals will cost an estimated $300 to $1,000 per year on a seven-year $1,000 per year on a seven-year

These changes are necessary to bring the city up-to-date as the rest of the county and state march forward into a world of technological advances, said public safety director Frank Lauhoff.

THESE CHANGES are necessary to bring the city up-to-date as the rest of the county and state march forward into a world of technological advances, asid public safety director Frank Lauhoff.

The city of Farmington could barely keep time with an old dispatch console for which parts had become obsolete.

The new console includes police and fire dispatch, mirrored parabolic lighting, which is adjustable and easier on the eyes, and room for the emergency E-91-1 system, Lauhoff said. The console also allows space for dual-dispatching, in cases where more than one dispatcher is needed.

Officers and reserves can be called at a single touch, which also updates the department's technology for contacting firefighters. The city's public safety department handles both fire and police protection for the city of nearly 12,000.

A new computer in the dispatch center also gives "better formatting" for access to Oakland Country's CLEMIS — the Court Law Enforcement Management Information System, which centralizes information for those who flight crime, be added.

Dispetchers who handle all radio transmissions will be freed from routine calls and able to handle alter that year.

The terminals will also speed the information about drivers and vehicle registrations, officials say.

APPROVED BY the Farmington City Council last December, this system is lied into another area-wide law enforcement effort. Officials are hoping more than 200 terminals will be activated throughout Oakland County. Since Lauhoff does not expect installation until later this year, council members agreed to budget the cost into the upcoming 1988-99 liscal year.

Already bought and being used is the department's video training system, which briefs officers on up-to-date techniques in areas such as self-defense, deadyly force situations or how to handle fleeling felous.

Following the viewing of situations on the video screen, officers must correctly answer questions on the computer. Their answers are printed and eventually a final score is given.

score is given.

Not only is the system cost effective by keeping officers on the premises while training, Lauhoff sald, but also standardizes the process by making sure all officers receive training in necessary areas.

"And it's entertaining. That's good, because you always learn better when things are entertaining," he added.

Teen is latest victim in series of sex assaults

A man wearing a ski mask and armed with a knife accested a 17-year-old Bir-mingham girl in the garage of her home on Puritan last Tuesday night, forced her up-stairs and sexually assaulted her.

The attack was interrupted by a friend of the victim who happened to come to the house at the time. The assailant fled, appar-

The assault is similar to at least eight other incidents of rape or attempted rape in Bloomfield Township, Birmingham, West Bloomfield and Farmington Hills since April.

A common link in the series of attacks is the rapist's physical description, the ski mask, the weapon and the method of attack. He is believed to be white, about 5 feet 11 inches tall, with a thin to medium build.

"We don't know enough at this moment to tie it in," Birmingbam Capt. Millard Squirle said Wednesday. But Bloomfield Township officers involved with the investigation since the series of attacks began April 8 were already meeting yesterday morning with Birmingbam investigators regarding the latest incident.

In one of the rapes, the assailant punctured the victim's jaw with the knife.

THE LAST INCIDENT before Tuesday's attack was on Thanksgiving night when two women were raped and robbed at a house in Farmington Hills.

Folice in Bioomield Township and Birmingham reported three sexual attacks in adjacent subdivisions during April. On April 8, a woman in her 40s was raped and robbed in a house on Berkshire near Lahser and Maple.

On April 24, in the same house, another woman in her 40s was the victim.

On April 15, a woman about 40 had just parked her car in her garage near Lincoli, and Westchester in Birmingham when: man grabbed her, pressed a kalle to het heastallant fled after the woman beganscreaming.

On May 9 in West Bloomfield, a woman inter 40s was attacked and robbed at a residence near 14 Mile and Orchard Lake.

On Sept. 19 a baby sitter in her early teens was raped in a house on Wedgewooth car Lincoln and Laiser in Bloomfielt Township.

On Oct. 15, there was an aborted attaction a woman in her 40s who drove into her garage in West Bloomfield, near Maple and Inkster.

"Appeal to the tastes of your audience and you're sure to have a advertising promotion that works."

So says Seissas Pheasant and Gary Holmberg, owners of Images Design, a Farmington Hills graphic communications company. To prove it, they've created a self-promotional piece that they feel is too sweet to ignore. Catering to the senses of sight, smell and "good taste," Images Design, with the help of a local gournet checolate shop, developed a chocolate replica of a portfolio for promotional mailing, Using an advertising slang term for portfolio, an accompanying brochure says, "A Sweeter Corporate Image is in the Bag." It invites the reader to sample both the chocolate version and later the real thing via a sales representative. "We wanted to create a piece that would stand out among a busy executive's daily mail. When they open the box to reveal the thick piece of cheoclate, we feel they'll be compelled to read the brochure overviewing the company." Pheasant said. "Also, since our logs is moided into the checolate, our name is continually before them as they mibble it."

Images Design opened its doors six years ago and has since then outgrown its original Farmington Hills studio. Even its second and larger studio, also in Farmington Hills. Should a third move become lnevitable, Images Design will remain in Farmington Hills since the two orners and three of the employees live in the community.
