

New labels arrive from Pacific Northwest

A couple of years ago this column announced the pending arrival of many new labels from the Pacific Northwest.

It is time now to take an assessment of those that now adorn the shelves of select wine stores in our area. They are still not an everyday item and must be searched for. Public acceptance here has been slow but is growing, as it is nationally.

Oregon wines first, Washington and then California.

Probably the premier wine-growing region in the United States for certain varietals, the industry is small but growing steadily. Its cool north region below Portland in the Willamette Valley produces some of the finest pinot noir in the world and some distinctive chardonnays, rieslings and gewurztraminer. Farther south in the Umpqua Valley cabernet and merlot show well along with sauvignon blanc, and, further south, zinfandel.

There are now 13 winery choices available in Michigan, many of them with only select representation.

ADAMS' VINEYARDS Winery: Maker of excellent pinot noir and chardonnay, limited quantities.

Adelheim Vineyards: Very prestigious and respected, David Adelheim produces excellent pinot noir, chardonnay, riesling, pinot gris (an excellent grape), sauvignon and a bit of sauvignon blanc.

Alpine Vineyards: Most northerly grower of cabernet, Dan Jepsen also makes a decent pinot noir, gewurztraminer and riesling show well along with sauvignon blanc, and, further south, zinfandel.

Bethel Heights Vineyard: An excellent 1985 chardonnay has just made its local debut from here, one of Oregon's finest producers. The winery's chenin blanc, gewurztraminer and pinot noir are also notable.
