

Cabinet face-lift can save money

AP — If you are remodeling your kitchen and thinking about putting in new cabinets, you might want to consider giving your old ones a facelift instead. As a do-it-yourself project, it can save you money and at the same time get the quality look that you want.

A newly introduced solid oak kitchen cabinet refacing system packages contemporary-styled solid oak cabinet doors, drawer fronts and matching peel-and-stick oak veneer into a step-by-step procedure designed especially for the do-it-yourselfer and one that requires no special tools or carpentry skills.

The system offers a variety of cabinet doors and drawer fronts to accommodate almost any kitchen cabinet you might have. Cabinet doors and drawer fronts both are three-quarters of an inch thick, with door fronts available in two panel styles. Cabinet fronts come in nine standard door sizes; drawer fronts are available in three sizes. Non-standard door sizes can be adjusted using framing strips. The refacing system also includes matching peel-and-stick oak veneer for application over all front cabinet frame surfaces and exposed ends. The veneer features specially formulated pressure-sensitive adhesive to provide easy application as well as durability.

THE REFACING PROCESS is a four-step procedure that anyone with basic do-it-yourself skills can perform. Installing cabinet doors and applying the matching veneer is done as follows:

1. Remove all old cabinet doors, hinges and catches.
2. Match pre-selected doors with the appropriate cabinet door openings.
3. Apply peel-and-stick oak veneer over all old face frames and exposed side panels.
4. Apply the finish, add new hard-
