feetly into the new couple's home and lifestyle.

In fact, the bride herself can help by putting several smaller gifts on her gift registry. It's a welcomed courtesy to potential shower guests, as well as bridal party members who may be buying multiple gifts.

Whatever the type of shower, say the editors of "Bride's Magazine," it's important to remember that bridal showers are primarily "parties with a purpose" — giving gifts. Experts differ widely on whether to add other shower activities.

"The 'opening ceremony' is all the entertainment that's necessary," claims etiquette writer Elizabeth Post, while others in the know suggest a variety of activities from ice-breakers to picture-taking.

HOSTESSES STRIVING for something a little more than "eating and opening" might consider circulating a blank book among the guests for advice, inspiring thoughts or candid comments.

Other fun activities include having the guest(s) of honor share briefly how the relationship blossomed or having guests who may not know each other tell humorous stories from the honoree's past.
