Storms subside for party time

THUNDER STORMS came, went and kept threatening throughout the day but by party time DJ Magic Harris was calling out, "It's Tuesday night at Daniel J's. Everybody Get Up."

Daniel J. Soller was relieved to see when everybody did. His tent had blown over once during the afternoon storms while he was preparing to receive guests for the largest fund-raiser he had ever staged. But the guests who came to contribute to AIDS research filled up Daniel J's Salon in Farmington Hills and its adjacent ready-for-the-party outdoor tent.

"I had a lot of help preparing for the benefit from merchants and clients who donated something for the silent auction, merchants who gave me discounts on goods or services, even the models from Milane Modeling came as volunteers — which is unheard of," Soller said.

"I'm sure it was because AIDS is the one disease that is going to affect everyone of us, eventually. If it hasn't already, one way or another. I've lost two personal friends. And we all know someone who knows someone who is or has been a victim. The money raised here tonight is going to stay in Michigan and be used for research. "Elizabeth Taylor has covered the west coast. They don't need any money out there for all the work she's been doing. But there is little-to-no money at all for research now in Michigan. I am well aware that the living victims need help, but this money will all be put to use in finding a cure," he said.

The benefit's parade of fashions for the guests came from Eleganza, Esther & Estelle's, Bricker Tunis Furs, and were accessorized by Quintessence.
