

Cable programming provides holiday pleasure

"Christmas is a time for giving." An editorial statement by Jack Le-Goff brought to mind how our own community television channel via cable does give on a daily basis. Best of all the giving is in the direction of those who have interest in the medium of communication. Really what we mean is that we know how all of you like to watch television and how we all have been rewarded by viewing options.

As holiday and family commitments take priority, even regular television rituals change. Thoughts on community service and creativity may temporarily switch to family obligation, religious devotion and retail expectations.

We would like to keep you in the television and radio spectrum a few moments more. Through our local access television channels, you can share a beautiful experience with a friend or family member. It is well known that we provide free workshops, studio, equipment and staff around town. Now would be a wonderful time to decide to open the door to opportunity to meet new friends, develop new skills and learn the ins and outs of television.

Each one of us knows someone who is complaining of being bored, not challenged, lonely, in the process of changing life structures, looking for a new job or simply wanting to be on TV or radio. Give them this gift. Call our SWOCC offices for a brochure and to register for the monthly media workshops. What more wonderful gift to give than the recognition that they are special and offer them a new opportunity."

Job, tax credit program topic of show

There is good news for certain categories of job seekers and the employers who hire them. A federal program that has helped thousands of people obtain jobs, while giving federal tax credits to their employers, has been extended for another year.

Targeted Jobs Tax Credits have helped 11,000 state residents find jobs, and given Michigan employers $27 million in tax credits. Carol Krupa, who administers the program for the Michigan Employment Security Commission.

The incentive behind TJTC is for employers to hire someone who might not normally have hired," says Krupa. "It's a wonderful marketing tool for eligible job seekers, who are able to tell a potential employer, 'You get a tax credit for hiring me.'"

Krupa, who appears on the cable television program, "The Job Show," airing at 6:30 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 29, on MetroVision Channel 12, says the TJTC tax credit is much better than a deduction. "A deduction reduces your taxable income. A tax credit, however, is right off the bottom line -- a dollar for dollar reduction."

For each employee who is hired in compliance with the program's rules, the employer receives a federal tax credit equal to 40 percent of the first $8,000 paid to that person, says Krupa. In other words, the employer's tax burden could be reduced by up to $2,400 for each employee hired that year.

"THERE is very little paperwork for the employer," says Krupa. "The employer simply fills out a sheet of paper that's six or seven lines long." She advises employers the paperwork must be done in advance of the employee's first day on the job, though.

Among the nine categories of job-seekers eligible to be hired under TJTC are economically disadvantaged youths age 18 to 22, low-income veterans and ex-offenders (convicted of felonies), and people receiving various types of governmental assistance.

To find out more about TJTC, both employers and job seekers who think they may be eligible for the program should contact their local MESSC office for further details.

On the second segment of "The Job Show," Lt. Col. James Beahon, professor of military science at the University of Detroit, discusses the Reserve Officer Training Corps programs at Michigan's universities and the numerous ways involvement can benefit students.
