

Miniature exhibit shows unusual skills

Stiefel sent a beautifully accessorized antique bentwood cradle and a completely outfitted 18th century weaver's studio, with an authentic copy of floor loom at Greenfield Village. The weaver is shown working in his studio and along the wall are many of his completed coverlets. This is a remarkable scene.

In another display of miniature textiles are several pettipoint rugs and a flame stitched upholstered wing chair by Sister Pauline Boyd of Saginaw, 1,000 stitches to the inch.

Marjorie Adams of Washington Courtland, Ohio, specializes in miniature painting. Another collector, Curtis Chastenought's Blue Boy or 18th century Chinese woodblock prints by Hiroshige or Harunobu, Adams can deliver. She also did miniature wedding portraits of Goad's daughter and two sons and their spouses on commission.

Still, it's hard to top the workmanship and creativity of Judy Shellhouse of Plymouth. Even these professionals gasped as they unpacked the exhibits of miniature animals and Mark Twain (labeled Lincoln bed in the exhibit) just prior to opening day. The bed is so named because because when Twain used it in Italy, he reportedly slept with his head at the foot of the bed, so he could look at the beautiful headboard. Shellhouse also made the miniatures of the oriental furniture. "The Adams' Collection" which Goad's grandparents brought from the Orient.

"Interpreters in Miniature," done in cooperation with Birmingham Bloomfield Art Association, is open free of charge, from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday, 1516 S. Cranbrook, Birmingham.

One of the most spectacular exhibits in the miniature exhibition at Birmingham Bloomfield Art Association is a completely equipped and working carousel by Ronald A. Lee. It is on loan from a private collector.
