Neglected children program needs aides

Oakland Family Services is seeking volunteers to participate in a new treatment program being developed for families whose children are being chronically neglected. The "Family Empowerment Program," funded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, is a pilot project aimed at breaking the generational cycle of neglect seen in a significant percentage of families in this area. Many parents are trying unsuccessfully to care for their children, lacking the crucial knowledge, support and personal experience of having been nurtured and protected by caring parents during their own childhoods, which would make it possible for them to truly "parent."

Volunteers will be trained and professionally supervised to develop a close one-to-one relationship with a parent. The goal will be to provide caring, consistent support, education and role modeling to each parent in the program. Volunteers will work closely with one another, and in cooperation with the agency's treatment team, but each parent-volunteer relationship will develop independently, over the course of the project. A number of other volunteer opportunities exist within the program. Community members may become involved as tutors (for both children and adults), as leaders of nurturing children's groups, or as co-leaders of parent-child interaction groups. Support from the community is a critical element of this treatment program. If you care about families, have some time to give, and know how difficult being a parent can be under the best of circumstances, the Family Empowerment Program needs you.
