Center transports technology

The Farmington Hills-based Advanced Center for Technology Training (ACTT) has developed customizing training programs that focus on the inability of America's work force to adapt to and function in complex and ever-changing environments.

ACTT designed a mobile training center that has recently returned from a tour of several southeastern U.S. cities. More than 4,000 educators took part in hands-on demonstrations in ACTT's mobile training center.

The mobile training center will be on display at The Jobware, a State of Michigan-sponsored exhibition at Cobo Hall April 5-6 in Detroit.

"During the next 10 or 20 years, both the people now in the work force and those yet to join will need — in addition to basic reading and math skills — technology literacy as a prerequisite for their jobs," said Richard Brown, ACTT's director.

ACTT also provides instruction and support materials for basic skills and technology literacy. Their training programs benefit a variety of people, including workers requiring upgraded job skills to cope with new technology, educators, students, prison inmates and managers involved with automated manufacturing.

THE NEW mobile training center offers on-site comprehensive instruction in full-or-half-day seminars, tailored to their client's needs to provide crucial hands-on experience.

9-screen theater at site of drive-in

A nine-screen movie theater, featuring Dolby Stereo Sound, will be part of the new West River Center, a shopping development, former site of the Grand River Drive-In, Farmington Hills.

The announcement was made by GIA Associates Limited Partnership of Southfield, general partner Fred Goldberg. Unified Artists Theatre Circuit and Taubman Theatres will build the theater complex.

Completion of the theater is expected to be about Christmas time. It will bring the number of screens operated in Detroit by Unified Artists Theatre Circuit. "It reinforces our belief in the Detroit market."
