Piano OK in library

Q. We are moving from our large home to a new condominium. In our present home our grand piano has a special place in our living room. There's not enough space in the living room of our new condo for the piano. We have an open floor plan. The living room has a dining "U" and a small library that is just off the foyer, visible when you are in the living room. Would it look strange if I put the piano in the library?
A. No. On the contrary, I think it is a wonderful idea. I think your library will look quite grand with your book shelves and piano. Now, your library is also your music room.
I find it interesting that I received this letter from a reader when I have just bought a grand piano. My husband and I love music. For years we talked about buying a piano and taking lessons.
We soon found that buying a piano is a major investment, so we decided to look for a previously owned baby grand. We looked through the yellow pages and contacted every music store that refurbished pianos. We left our name along with the size our room would allow. For weeks we looked at pianos. If the tone was good, the finish was not. We were getting to the point of scrapping the idea when we received a phone call from Don David Piano Company in Ferndale.

Our baby grand has a beautiful ebony finish, new soundboard, new strings, new hardware and a wonderful tone. This piano company delivers the piano to you and tones it three or four weeks later — just enough time to let the instrument adjust to its new environment.
