Photography marks milestone 150th year

Today, I'd like to provide some food for thought about the 150th anniversary of photography and what photography means to us today. Let's begin by stepping back through time.

When we remember the Vietnam War, photographic images immediately form in our minds - perhaps the little girl fleeing from the destruction of napalm bombs or the haunting shot of the execution of the Viet Cong guerrilla.

Many of us remember pictures of President Dwight Eisenhower visiting our troops in Korea and the inspiring flag raising over Iwo Jima toward the end of World War II.

Turn your thoughts to World War I and pictures of soldiers in odd shaped helmets huddling in muddy trenches come to mind.

And who can reflect on the Civil War without recalling photos of the many dead sprawled over the now lovely hills of our eastern states?

But think of the War of 1812 or the Revolutionary War and what comes to mind? Paintings and drawings. We can't relate as well to these occasions because, of course, photography didn't then exist.

Our backward journey through time using America's involvement in war as a yardstick is a good way to illustrate the significance of the photographic image as we note this anniversary.

For the past 150 years, photographs have been used to inform, inspire, entertain, document or shock us in ways that no other medium ever could or ever will do.

Through photographs, we can travel to distant lands we can otherwise only dream about. Scenes we would never have known about if it weren't for photography can be etched in our minds.

We are able to share special moments with celebrities and athletes. And we have shared the sorrows of people just like ourselves who have lost loved ones in a plane crash or other disaster. And all of this is possible through the wonder of photography.

Think for a moment during this milestone year for photography and imagine how difficult and unsettling life would be without photographs. What else can evoke the emotions without the use of a single word?

Whether it's the well-known image of John-John saluting a farewell at President Kennedy's funeral or an old, faded picture of a favorite relative that has meaning only to a few, photographs touch us in ways no other medium can.

And as photographers can touch people, too. We have the ability to make visible what others can only sense. We can move people and stir emotions in a way that is unique.

Take a moment to appreciate how very fortunate we are to have photography play such a vital role in our daily lives.
