Teachers ride carousel of new education ideas

About 120 Farmington teachers, representing 14 elementary schools, gathered at East Middle School for a special in-service entitled, "The Carousel of Ideas: The Reading, Writing, Thinking Connection" Nov. 30.

The presenters were 36 classroom teachers from kindergarten through fifth grade.

The in-service was organized in response to an interest on the part of classroom teachers who continue to be interested in learning and growing professionally.

"In Farmington, much is being done to re-think and expand our thinking about what we teach and how we teach students as we prepare them to function productively in a 21st century society," said Marilyn Carlsen, staff development. "Of course, reading, writing and thinking are the backbone skills for the majority of learning."

CLASSROOM TEACHERS were the stars of the in-service. "Their creative and innovative applications toward a more holistic view of learning set the stage for a very stimulating evening," Carlsen said.

Participants became active learners as they moved at 15-minute intervals around the gym to one of eight stations, where presenters shared ideas that work with students.

The carousel stopped briefly so presenters and participants could have dinner and informal conversation.
