Seconals: Do They Depress?

Questions should be sent to the Community Commission on Drug Abuse, P.O. Box 4815, Livonia, Mich. 48151.

Q. I'd like to correct you on your article the other week. You talked about Seconals being a downer (depressant). I had just tried them and had gotten really keyed up instead.

L.M. Westland
A. There are several explanations:
1. The orange capsules you bought could have been filled with a depressant, stimulant or narcotic substance. They are almost all white bitter powders. What you get depends on what drug the man has and what color capsules he has to put them into.

2. You could have experienced what is called a "paradoxical" reaction: it's not at all uncommon for people to become stimulated by a depressant drug or depressed by a stimulant. What causes this is uncertain. What is certain is the danger of someone badly needing to come down and getting a dangerous high by a trick played by the pusher or by the person's own body chemistry.

Q. You had a question the other week about the need for "straight" people to understand the relative safety of marijuana. What about some straight facts from people who have tried it and really know where it's at?

R.J. Livonia
A. We know some of the people you're talking about. The latest issue of "The Spike," the paper published by the heroin addicts on Detroit's methadone program, contains an article on marijuana. We won't print any of it because it contains factual errors.

What makes it an important document is the hatred for marijuana that burns through the article. For many of these people, marijuana is the drug that got them where they are. No "straight" person could say the bitter things said there and be believed; as you suggested it has to come from someone who knows where it's at.

Q. Are tranquilizers addicting?

J.B., Livonia
A. Some of them are for some people. The "major" tranquilizers such as Thiazine generally don't present the problem. The "minor" tranquilizers such as Librium and Equanil (or Miltown) can be addicting.

Your particular response to these prescription medications should be monitored by your physician. They are definitely not drugs to be "swapped" or given to friends who are having emotional problems. To be specific, they could get hurt and you could get sued.
