

Biological father wins in Florida courts

 troit Magazine where he is publisher: "No words can describe how elated Heidi and I feel."
 Stein and his wife, whose name is Lebanese for "Heidi," own Heidi's Salons, a chain of beauty parlors with 10 outlets in Michigan and 38 nationally. They now live in West Palm Beach, Fla., although they spend a considerable amount of time in Michigan.

 About four years ago Stein signed a contract with Foster giving her $10,000 in exchange for giving birth to his biological child. She gave birth to a boy, Andrew, who was adopted by the Steins through the Florida courts.
 IN 1988, Foster filed suit in Florida, claiming the contract was invalid and demanding visitation rights.

Last year she sued for full custody.
 The Steins took the case to the Florida Supreme Court after an appeals court invalidated their surrogate contract.
 The Florida high court reversed that decision, saying to rule otherwise would throw into confusion hundreds of adoptions and divorces finalized by county court judges appointed as acting circuit judges in Dade County.

As of early this week, Foster's lawyer in Miami, Ira Elegant, had not announced a decision about whether the ruling would be appealed.
 Hayat Stein, however, said she believes the issue is settled, particularly since the court also ruled Foster has no visitation rights.
 "There's nothing more she can do legally," said Hayat, who said the court's decision has left her "numb."

Ed Rondina, coordinator of the SD swimsuit edition, started out as a hair stylist and still enjoys the work, in this case, with Carole Vosotas of Bloomfield Township.

RONDINA AND publisher Mike Stein are aware their swimsuit edition may come under fire from feminists who see it as exploiting women.

"I would tell them (avid feminists) not to buy the edition," said Rondina.

"But it's not sexist," Stein said. His readers are sophisticated enough to distinguish between a disgusting display of flesh and the tasteful blend of beauty and fashion.
 "There's nothing wrong with a beautiful body," Stein said. "And anybody who thinks a beautiful model is (necessarily) a dope is a dope himself."
 "We just think our swimsuit edition will be a welcome part of the Detroit area sports scene."
