'Dr. Boris' sparks student invention

Bob Hayduk is right in style with his glasses-style character Boris Bolshetsky. He hopes he can bring student inventions into vogue as well.
Hayduk, a curriculum consultant with Warren Consolidated Schools, recently visited Wooddale Elementary, where about 25 young inventors listened to the costumed character Boris talk about how thinking can lead to new inventions.
The third and fourth graders are participating in this year's Invent America program.
"In America, you have license to own your own invention," he said, with a Russian accent. "So, I come here and become citizen."
SOME OF the humorous Boris inventions included an "already smashed suitcase," a "Boris waffle maker," and a "Boris brush" which incorporated hair and toothbrushes.
Wooddale Elementary has had a state winner in the Invent America program, which encourages student inventions and patents. Student winners receive monetary awards, as do teachers and schools who receive grants to do further invention exploration.
Hayduk becomes Boris for students in a dozen districts each year. He started his presentations in disguise three years ago when Invent America was launched in Washington. "I wanted it to be fun and outrageous — that's what creativity is," he said.
