

Corey Zorop plays at the prodigy level

By Avigdor Zorop special writer

The literature for piano and violin is as rich and varied as the talent it tends to attract. Last week two programs featured these instruments. The Julius Chajes Music Fund concert series had violinist Sheila Fiekowsky and pianist Sayuri Miyamoto. The Cranbrook Music Guild presented violinist Corey Zorop and his sister, pianist Katia Corovsek.

Fiekowsky, a member of the Boston Symphony, is a Detroit native, who started playing with the Center Symphony, founded and directed by Julius Chajes. Miyamoto is studying for a doctorate at the Manhattan School of Music. Among her teachers was Seymour Lipkin, who was in turn a student of Mischa Kottler.

There were two large sonatas on this program — the K. 454 in B Flat Major by Mozart and the Sonata in D Minor Op. 94a by Prokofiev. Another major item was an arrangement by Duskin of Stravinsky's Fucineola presented by Corey Zorop.

The Chajes element on this program was the short selection "Teli-lah," which means prayer in Hebrew. The violinist's virtuosity was represented in the Second Polonaise Brillante by Wieniawski.

Avigdor Zorop

BOTH SONATAS were presented with clarity and crisp texture, with appropriate respect for their stylistic periods. Miyamoto realized that her role was at least equal in importance, at times it assumed a dominant role.

Her secure playing frequently made her the focus in these sonatas.

Fiekowsky played a more dominant role in the other selections. I didn't find the Stravinsky arrangement nearly as convincing as the original suite, though.

This wasn't just because some major portions of the variations were missing — the total effect was a let-down for those familiar with the original. However, both Fiekowsky and Miyamoto are extremely talented.

The term prodigy, when applied too frequently, loses its significance. Among the many talented young artists, only a few could undeniably qualify for this designation.

Violinist Corey Zorop qualifies as a plausible candidate for such a title. He has performed in this area on previous occasions, including this same series a year ago. While he tends to be the center of attention, his sister Katia, with impressive ability as a pianist, deserves recognition as well. Her works by Bach, Beethoven, Faure, Sarasate, Tchaikovsky and Ravel were on this program. Of these, the arrangement of a Bach sonata in E minor amounted to late 19th century Bach and shouldn't have been included in an otherwise brilliant program.

BEETHOVEN'S "Kreutzer" Sonata is the most demanding of his 10 sonatas for piano and violin. The first movement suffered from some instances of improper phrasing and an occasional loss of musical direction, but the variations of the second movement gradually shifted this work into the right channel and into the final movement.
