Stove is center of kitchen, family

THE HEARTH is the soul of the house, where the family gathers for food, warmth and fellowship, according to tradition.

While it's a bit hard to envision the family gathered around the microwave in these electronic days (a nice evening by the fire in five minutes), the stove — or whatever is used to boil, broil, fry, bake, or toast — is still the centerpiece of a kitchen.

One variation on the stove is the cooktop, a combination of burners, grills and controls in a horizontal panel, often installed in island counters. An example is a new gas downdraft cooktop from Modern Maid, which features interchangeable cartridges for double burners, griddle and rotisserie in addition to its grill. All surfaces are Teflon-coated, and the unit has formed burner bowls to catch boil-overs. The new model, PGT 193, replaces the earlier KGT 693, which the company says was the first gas downdraft cooktop in the industry.

Ovens and cooking appliances that suspend under shelves may be a good choice for small or galley-style kitchens. The Spacemaker series from Black & Decker includes under-the-cabinet models of toaster oven-broilers, automatic drip coffee makers, a hot-air popcorn center, and a can opener. Compact countertop models of the toaster oven-broiler and the combination microwave and traditional oven and toaster also work in limited space.

FOR ANGLOPHILES and those with classic tastes, there is the Aga II, a scaled-down version of the well-known British four-oven stove (called a cooker in Britain) that has been created for the American market.

Modern Maid and Black & Decker products are widely available in stores. For information about Aga II dealers, contact AGA Cookers of North America in Stowe, Vt., (802) 253-9727.
