Voters pick Webb, Inch

CANDIDATES TOOK this election to the wire, with many doing last-minute campaigning.

Webb, who spent all day Monday at her home precinct at Farmington Training Center, said her supporters used a "telephone tree" Sunday and early Monday morning, calling to get voters out.

Myers was counting on "600 solid votes" from friends and supporters, but the turnout was larger than she expected, she said.

"I worked awfully hard, I had a good time, and I'm glad it's over," Myers, active in many school district groups and activities, plans to seek election again next year.

OTHER UNOFFICIAL vote counts released by the district included:

Richard DeVries with 319 votes, Robert Ranney with 292, Allen

Warner with 187, Sharon Rands with 145, Kim Jaske with 82, and James Barnes, who didn't complain actively, with 25.

Inch believes candidates will need to look to organized and sophisticated campaigns for future elections, he said.

Estimating spending between $700 and $800 this year, Inch "spent as much as I did in the first three elections combined," he said. "It is a new standard to look at for elections."

District launches recycling program menting programs this fall. Foam trays . . . are perceived as being the number one problem.

The district currently recycles engine oil in school shops and fat from fryers in school cafeterias. The district science center is also collecting household batteries for recycling.

ACCORDING TO Larsen, the district's aim in the near future is to:

- Reduce garbage at the source.
- Begin programs for all recyclable materials.
- Buy and use recycled products throughout the district.
- Implement an office recycling program for paper.
