

Sinai names branch after benefactors

Sinai Health Care System officials announced that the Farmington Hills-based Diagnostic Imaging Center opening late this summer will be named the Edward and Lillian Rose Diagnostic Imaging Center.

The Rose family has a longstanding relationship with Sinai. Brothers, Leslie, a member of Sinai's board of trustees since 1973, Irving and Sheldon have made a major financial commitment to the facility from their father Edward's estate.

Located at 32005 Northwestern Highway, the 6,500-square foot center will house a Siemens Magnetom 63 High Resolution Magnetic Resonance Imaging system and a Siemens Somatom Plus CT scanning unit.

Magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) is complementary to computerized tomography (CT scans), according to Dr. Philip N. Casadeo, chairman of Sinai's department of diagnostic imaging/radiology.

MRI incorporates magnetism and radio waves to create images rather than CT which utilizes computers and X-rays. Although both procedures may be used in some cases,

MRI is superior to CT in detecting such neurological disorders as multiple sclerosis, and CT is superior in discovering abnormalities of the pancreas.

Few MRI systems are available in the Detroit area, according to Casadeo, and Sinai's new imaging center will be advantageous to patients. "It will be accessible for patients in the northwest suburbs by offering these services on an outpatient basis," said Casadeo. "Patients will not need to travel a great distance, and it will reduce the waiting period for appointments. The facility will greatly increase the availability and accessibility of these imaging services."

Sinai's physician referral telephone number is 1-800-248-3827.
