Cold? Not so, say members of the American Skin Divers Association which has 140 members in the seven communities in Observerland. The ice divers traveled to Orchard Lake recently where a big triangular hole was cut in the ice, and some 50 climbed in for an underwater tour under the seven inch layer of ice. It may have been cold outside, but no one complained after spending long periods of time in the ice water. Of course, each wears a heated scuba suit, and each was accompanied by a partner to make sure nothing happened. Nothing did during the afternoon, and all enjoyed the outing as these pictures clearly show.
