"I'm afraid everyone has the image that it's over," said Parran, who started the Farmington-area chapter of Friends of Freedom. "I'm going to keep doing what I can."

That means collecting goods—food, personal items, and stuff like magazines and travel garnes for the troops in the Persian Gulf. Parran get word this week from the Berkley headquarters of the group that branches of the armed-services are Parran said.

The three residents — with the help of the Rev. George Hack and members of the Farmington Hills Church of Christ — a couple weeks ago got the ball rolling to support the troops by sending them a little hit of home in packages of food, books and personal items.

The organization was originally begun in September by Berkley resident Laura Czarney who has a son and son-in-alw in the Persain Gulf. Anyone interested in contributing for the troops may call the Church of Cirist during business hours or leave a message on the answering machine, 477-5033.

Drop boxes for the Friends of Freedom are stationed throughout the community, including at the Farmington and Farmington Itilis city halls.
