

Temple Beth El salutes its heritage

One hundred forty years of history and tradition is being celebrated with "A Heritage of Light: Temple Beth El 1850-1990" on view in the Temple Shapero Museum through June 30.

It traces the events which shaped the lives of the members of Michigan's oldest Jewish congregation. Photographs and family heirlooms, many lent to the museum especially for this exhibit, are on display.

The theme of the exhibit, "A Heritage of Light," is symbolic of the role light has played throughout Jewish history. The Ner Tamid (Eternal Light) symbolizes, not just a miracle of a moment, but God's presence in the midst of the congregation.

For Temple Beth El, light has played a significant role architecturally as well. When Minora Yamasaki set out to design the present temple, he studied Jewish ritual and tradition and concluded that Judaism was a "religion of light — not of mysticism and darkness."

He incorporated light into his design in the use of windows surrounding the sanctuary and the skylight which allows light to flood the area from above. He saw the natural light as a symbol of spiritual light that goes out into the world and shines on each worshiper.

The exhibit and the commentary accompanying the on-display illuminate the past and also point out, particularly in the section devoted to holiday observances, how Judaism has served as a light for generations.

Among the objects on loan are:

- A late 19th Century pulpit cover, richly hand-embroidered.
- A shell-shaped Sabbath bread plate delicately painted with an interior scene of sheaves of wheat.
- Two marriage certificates, dated 1882 and 1898.
- A miniature silver dreidel made in England in the early 20th Century.

Photographs depicting American Jews at home in America: an 1885 amateur baseball team, turn-of-the-century businessmen, the 1917 graduating class of Detroit's Central High School.

A Gustav Dore Bible, dated 1874 bearing testimony to Dore's fame as the most productive and celebrated designer of wood-engraved book illustrations in the 19th Century.

While the Dore Bible is among the oldest and most celebrated of the objects on loan, it is in good company when juxtaposed with the newest of the donated items, a tapestry weaving by a recently arrived Soviet emigre which reflects both her artistry and affirmation of ties to a new home and an ancient tradition.

The exhibit represents a blending of existing museum and archival material with newly loaned memorabilia and Judaica. The responsibility for the blending, cataloging and display has been that of Donna Carmitte, assistant curator, European sculpture and decorative arts department, Detroit Institute of Arts, and curator of this special exhibition.

She has been joined in this effort by Paul

Ameye, an alumnus of the Center for Creative Studies, currently with H.B. Stubbs Company, an exhibit and display firm. Together, they have produced an exhibition evocative of the Temple's 140 year history and its contribution to the Detroit community.

Planning the exhibition has been a two-year effort of a Temple committee chaired by Josephine Bloom, Mary Shapero, Jean Shapero and Saralyn Batan. It will be open during regular Temple hours, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday-Friday. Special tours may be arranged. For information, call 851-1100.

Double bass, piano featured in recital

DSO Preludes West will feature a recital by Stephen Molina, double bass, and Robert Conway, piano, Friday at Temple Beth El, Telegraph at 14 Mile, Bloomfield Township. They will perform works by J.E. Galliard, Armand Russell, David Ellis, Max Bruch and J.S. Bach.

Luncheon will be served at 12:30 p.m. and the music will begin immediately after. Tickets for this final 1991 Preludes West program are $15 per person. For information, call 962-1000, Ext. 286 for information.

Jerome Hines can still thrill an audiences

By Mary Jane Doerr
special writer

It is amazing how great singers well into their 60s such as Joan Sutherland, Leontyne Price and Carlo Bergonzi still have magnificent voices that can thrill an audience.

Seventy-three-year-old Jerome Hines, one of America's finest cantate basses, did just that Saturday evening at Highland Park Baptist Church in Southfield.

He is no longer singing "Boris Godunov," his greatest role at the Bolshoi Opera, or taking messages from the Kremlin to the White House as he did during the Cuban missile crisis.

Now he is appearing with opera companies and giving recitals all over the United States, as he did Saturday evening.

SINCE HINES last appeared as Sarastro a few years ago with the Michigan Opera Theatre, his voice has gotten higher. Saturday he sang Figaro's "Non più andrai" from Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro," an aria usually sung by baritones, as if he were a baritone.

He still has his demonic laugh as Mephistophe-les ("Sereade" from Gounod's "Faust"), although his melodic lines aren't as even as when this reviewer heard him last summer. He is so animated, he is funny even in Italian as music teacher Don Basilio ("La Cullumia" from Rossini's "Barber of Seville").

For more laughs he sang Hutchinson's "Old Mother Hubbard" in the style of Handel and gave a stirring version of "La Marseillaise" in Schumann's "Two Grenadiers." Highland Park's minister of music, Gary Matthews, gave strong support as accompanist.

Hines, who retired just three years ago, holds the record for the longest singing career at the Metropolitan Opera. He sang there for 41 seasons. It is easy to understand why.

Translator to sign book

W.S. Kuniezek, book of the Month Club author, will give a talk and sign his new book, the first direct translation into English of "With Fire and Sword" by Nobel Prize winner Henryk Sienkiewicz, at 7:30 p.m. Friday at the American-Polish Cultural Center, Maple and Dequindre, Troy.

It is a story of the time of King John Sobieski when the Poles, almost single-handedly, kept the Turks from overrunning central Europe.
