OETIS TAUK

Colleagues helped Mel Tillis overcome fear of stammering

By Polly Vonetes

Q: Questions of general interest? My daughter-in-law asked for information on Julius LaRosa and Mel Tillis early this fall. She asked if you knew if they were married and something about them. Now, I may be wrong, but to me this is a topic people are interested in. Not in Gall Davis (Dec. 1), Get with it! -S. Matrch, Mankato, Mian.

A: I wonder if your daughter-in-law knows how lucky she is to have a mother-in-law who takes such an interest in her and will fight for her rights. Way to go, Mom! But I'd better get "with it" and answer your question. According to my files, I answered a similar question on LaRosa about the time her question came in. Since you asked so nicely, I'll answer it again. Julius LaRosa, at age 60, is alive and well and performs periodically in Atlantic City. He and his wife (Perry Como's niece) have two children and make their home in New York, Mel Tillis, born in 1932, developed his stammer at the age of 3 after a bout with malaria. They thought it was an emotional problem that would correct itself, but, of course, it didn't. For six years he would only sing on stage; he never spoke. Encouraged by Minnie Pearl and Glen Campbell, he began talking to his audience. The results of his success speak for themselves. Tillis performs over 200 engagements a year across the United States. When he is not on the road, he enjoys being on his 700-acre farm outside of Nashville, Tenn. He is married and the father of four children.

Q: Our family is divided on the subject of 3-D movies. Please tell de when they were introduced. What was the first movie using 3-D? Year? Was the Ten Commandments ever made in 3-D? What year was the first Ten Commandments made? —Rachel Hagewood, Kingman, Ariz.

A: Three-dimensional filmmaking had been tried in 1935 by MGM as a gimmick involving throwaway paper glasses with one red and one green eveniece to match the double image on the screen. In 1953, Hollywood really got the idea that this device would save an ailing industry, and a number of cheap pictures were shot in 3-D using cheap pictures were shot in 3-D using Polaroid glasses. The first of these commercial films in 1952 was Bwana Devil, starring Robert Stack and Barbara Britton. This presentation of films soon lost out to CinemaScope. The Ten Commandments was first released in 1923, starring Richard Dix and Theodore Roberts. In 1956, Charlton Heston, Yul Brynner and

Mel Titlis

Anne Baxter starred in the second Ten Commandments release. Both versions were directed by Cecil B. DeMille, but neither was ever filmed in

Q: I really like 21 Jump Street. Please tell me why Johnny Depp, Peter DeLuise and Dustin Nguyen left the show. Can I catch these actors in any other show and also Richard Gricco? I have never had a letter answered before. -Lee Parker, Lufkin, Texas

A: All of your favorite cast members of 21 Jump Street left the series to pursue their careers in other projects However, Johnny Depn is the one who is really progressing. He is corrently starring in the theatrical hit Fdward Scissorhands. Richard Grieco recently made his big-screen debut in the comedy film II Tooks Could Kill.
