Coleman Sr. concerned

was the backup to Enos last year, was 2-of-5 for 53 yards and Gieselman 6-of-11 for 87.
"The perception of the public -and the way things are judged as to how the quarterbacks are progressing — is through the passing game," Millard Sr. said. "The perception is that Johnson is doing really well, but he had twice the opportunities to get those statis."
One of the things Coleman will ask Perles when they meet is what direction the offense is taking under new quarterbacks coach Ed Zunbrecher, who joined the staff
after former offensive coordinator
at present, with assistants Charlie Baggett in charge of passing, Pat
Morris the running game and Zaunbrecher the quarterbacks.
"I WONT say they're going in

"I WONT say they're going in that (dropback) direction," Coleman said. "They tell me they're going to put in more stuff, Pass blocking for a rollout quarterback takes more time to develop, and they, may, not have, had the time, with a shorter spring practice to do that."

A primary reason Mill Jr. chose MSU was because the Spartans ran offense that was "a carbon copy of the Harrison offense" and Watts liked Mill Jr. and was instrumental in recruiting him, according to Millard Sr.

A subject on which the Colemans grafted recruiters was whether they had a legitimate interest in using Mill Jr. at quarternack. Millard Sr. said he told coaches the scholarship wasn't the important thing—"He'll have an education if I have to pay for it"—but his son didn't want to sit on the bench.

want to sit on the bench.

That's another reason the elder Coleman feels an obligation to speak up the believes he especially must look out for his sors best interest because Mill Jr. doesn't fit the stereotyped image of a quarterback at 5-foot-9 and 175 pounds.

"You always have to cope with a negative mindset, being in that position," he said. "Nobody knows what he can do, and they're saying he can't do 1.1 Mill had been felt and with his stats, he would have been more recognized than he was the would have been talked about like a (Joe) Montana or (Jeff) George "

There has been no mention of moving Mill Jr. to defensive back, according to his father, and Mill Jr. isn't considering a transfer to another school.

BUT, WITH four good quarter-backs wanting to play, something will have to give, be added. He foresees Mill Jr., if Johnson be-comes the starter and plays two years and Miller remains the backup and eventual starter in 1993, not playing until he's a sen-1993, not playing until he's a sen-ior.

"If you look at the history of MSU quarterbacks — and this is something I admire in George— when he selects a quarterback he sticks with that quarterback through good and bad, "Millard Sr. said." Bobby Meallister led them to the Rose Bowl one year and had a bad year the next. George stuck with him and defended him.

"I'm looking at it realistically. I'm not forcing their hand. When I meet with George, I hope he understands that I know situations change, and I want them to apprise me of that."
