their repertoire from gospel and classical into jazz and popular music.

"I like the sound of a men's chorus, and there are so many arrangements out there for four-part men's voices," Moore said, citing the theme song from television's "Growing Pains" as a fine example of a men's chorus.

"I think this group is great. I would rate them a nine on a scale from one to 10," he said.

pernatural thriller, makes its video debut Tuesday, July 2, in a 3-D holographic package designed specifically for the release. Inspired by the movie's most suspenseful scenes, the package features the ancient mirror of the title, with a holographic image of a demon behind its glass. The video will be released by Academy Entertainment, Inc. "Mirror, Mirror" is a production of Orphan Eyes, a Michigan-based entertainment company headed by Virginia Perilli and Jimmy Lifton. Lifton, a graduate of Southfield High School, attended UCLA Film School. "Mirror, Mirror" had its theatrical world premiere in metro Detroit in August 1990 and is still being exhibited theatrically around the country.
