2nd county resident files recall petition vs. Rewold

By Pat Murphy

Staff writer

For the second time this month, an area resident has filed a recall petition against County Commissioner Roy Rewold — again because of his role in promoting the proposed incinerator in Auburn Hills and the all-or-nothing ballot proposal.

And, for a second time, Rewold, R-Oakland Township, defended his actions and poked a little fun at those seeking to oust him from office.

"Like I said before, that puts me in good company," Rewold chuckled yesterday, moments after an Auburn Hills woman, Laurie Eaton, filed a recall petition against him.

But it wasn't all fun and games.

Rewold also said he considers the recall attempts an unwarranted attack on his performance in office and unnecessary harassment of him personally.

"I run a company that did $20 million worth of business last year," he said, referring to Frank Rewold & Son, Inc., of Rochester, named after his father. "My time (professional and personal) is limited, but I don't need this job and I don't need the grief (of a recall). I don't know if I'm going to continue taking this much longer," said Rewold who was elected in 1982 and is chairman of the Oakland County Board of Commissioners.

EATON, IS A member of Residents Against Incinerators and Landfills, who filed a two-part recall petition with Oakland County Elections officials.

One part contends Rewold "misused public funds when he attended a secret meeting" in Washington, D.C., on financing the incinerator.

The second part, reiterates that Rewold should be recalled because of the way he lobbied and voted at the May 23 meeting of the Oakland county board.

A hearing is scheduled for 8:30 a.m. on July 9, to determine if the language on the most recent recall petition is sufficiently clear.

At issue in this and other recall attempts is Rewold's fervent and continuous support for Oakland's proposed $500 million solid waste plan calling for recycling, incinerating and landfilling of county trash.

"RAIL and a host of other critics want Oakland County to go ahead with recycling and a limited landfill operation in Orion Township. But they are highly critical of the proposed incinerator, claiming emissions will be high, there will be health and cause health problems for residents."

Friction between incinerator foes and Rewold reached something of a climax at the May 23 meeting over the wording of the proposal commissioners voted to put on the Nov. 5 ballot.

Rewold and 10 other commissioners approved an all-or-nothing ballot proposal giving voters one choice — to approve the solid waste program with the incinerator.

I don't need this job and I don't need the grief (of a recall). I don't know if I'm going to continue taking this much longer.

— Roy Rewold
R-Oakland Township

THE ALL-OR-NOTHING label comes from comments made by Rewold and like-minded commissioners who have said that if voters rejected that ballot proposal the county would likely walk away from any solid waste program.

Rewold's critics — including County Commissioners Marilyn E. Geisinger, R-Bloomfield Hills, and Donald E. Bishop, R-Rochester Hills — wanted two ballot proposals.

One would give voters the option of approving, or rejecting, a waste program with the incinerator. The other would separate the incinerator from the rest of the waste program, giving voters the chance to approve or reject, the waste program without the incinerator.

Rewold said he wasn't surprised by the recall petition filed against him Tuesday. Another recall petition, citing his insistence on the all-or-nothing ballot proposal, was dismissed by the Oakland Elections Commission one week earlier.

At a June 20 hearing, the commission threw that petition out after ruling the language was not clear enough that a prospective signer would fully understand the issue.

That petition had been filed by Joel Ristau, husband of Marilynne Burton-Ristau, the chairman of RAIL.

Rewold has repeatedly defended his position on the incinerator and his insistence on an all-or-nothing vote.

"Without the incinerator, the county plan is incomplete and will not meet the county's needs," he said.
