OPENING DAY for the Farmington schools Tuesday was hot and humid, but it didn't dampen spirits at Wood Creek Elementary.

There, physical education teacher Linda Perkins was preparing a beach party for her students, complete with blow-up pool, walls decorated with waves and fish and a King Square game with beach balls.

"Summer fun continues," she said, wiping her brow from the 90-degree temperatures. "It's just too hot. I can't make them do anything too strenuous."

Perkins, the district's elementary level teacher of the year for 1990-91, said she used part of her $300 stipend/award to buy paint and liven up the gym.

"You've got to make it a place kids want to come to," she added.

Throughout Wood Creek and the district's other 25 school buildings

Tuesday, students were getting acquainted with teachers, books and the realization that they were back to school.

"Things are going extremely well," said Don Cowan, director of building and student services for the district.

AT GILL Elementary, a renovation project was ahead of schedule allowing students to begin their year there without problems, Cowan said. State fire inspectors gave the go-ahead at Gill Monday. Meanwhile contractors continue work on the school's media center and six new classrooms in a new wing.

At the Farmington Training Center, a program for the trainable mentally impaired is being moved to a location on Research Drive in Farmington Hills.

The new program will be called Visions Unlimited. The change makes room for an alternative high school program at FTC for 35 students.

Other projects completed for the new year, include:

- Three portable classrooms from Longacre and Flanders elementary schools were moved to Beechview and Larkshire elementaries and Power Middle School.

Highmeadow students Jilliam Trefilek, (left) a fourth grader, and second grader Sarah Capina waited patiently for their bus Tuesday with Rosita Benevisez, Sarah's grandmother and other adults. The students are first bused to Wood Creek, where a Highmeadow bus is to pick them up.

Geri Trefilek kisses her daughter, Jillian, goodbye Tuesday, where she waited with classmates for a bus to Highmeadow Common Campus. After waiting one and a half hours, Trefilek eventually gave Jillian and friends a ride to school.

Mary Niedzwiecki checks the time at her daughters' Power Road school bus stop Tuesday, where the first day bus was running about 20 minutes late. Normally, the bus will pick up fifth grader Karla and first grader Julie and take them to Kenbrook Elementary. Julie got a ride Tuesday as a "first day of school" treat.

Wood Creek Elementary teacher Darlene Egbert welcomes fifth graders Karla Volpini and Kristina Sawicki (right) into her combined fourth/fifth grade classroom Tuesday. Students had half a day Tuesday and began full days of school on Wednesday.
