IN LEGAL TERMS

One thing that makes legal advice so costly in these days of "gyp and take" is that so few of us can say what we want to say in legal terms. For instance, if a Plymouth man wanted to give a friend an orange he would simply say, "Here, have an orange," and that would be the end of it, but if he were to trust it to a lawyer, here is or about how it would appear in writing:

"I hereby give and convey to you, all and singular, my estate and interest, right, title, claim and advantages of and in said orange, together with all its rind, skin, segments, pulp, seeds or pips, and all rights to advantages therein, with full power and privilege to smell, taste, suck, bite, chew, eat or otherwise gulp, swallow or consume said fruit, and to give grant and convey the same to any person or persons, of whatever age, sex, color or creed, with or without the rind, skin, segments, pulp, seeds or pips, anything hereinbefore or hereinafter, or in any other deed or deeds, document, instrument or in instruments of whatever kind or nature, to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding."
