DEATH PENALTY BILL EXPLAINED

A special dispatch to this morning's Detroit Free Press says: Predictions that the present legislature would take drastic measures to repress crime and punish criminals were made here today by Representative Milton R. Palmer, Detroit, speaking before the local merchants' bureau. Representative Palmer voiced this view in support of his bill now before the legislature, providing for capital punishment in first degree murder.

The Detroit legislator declared law enforcement is the greatest problem in America and asserted investigation showed three obstacles to its solution:

First: Lack of facilities in capturing criminals; second, lack of facilities for the conviction of criminals, and third, lack of certainty that criminals when convicted will receive adequate punishment for their crimes.

The speaker drew a picture contrasting the punishment meted out to robbers and to those who have committed murder. He declared that under the present law the murderer upon conviction is given a life term with the possibility of his being freed in a few years, while the bank robber draws a definite sentence that may prove more serious than that meted out to the murderer.

The death penalty bill that he has introduced would eliminate this one mad feature of the law, he declared. He holds that the moral effect of the presence of the law on the statute books would decrease the number of murders perceptibly.

Americans Not Prone to Abbreviated Terms

Spacious leishness characterizes even the speech of the American. It is sometimes supposed, quite wrongly, that in this he inclines to slang. On the contrary, he has time to eschew contradictions. He talks of "automobiles" when the poor Englishman, flustered by the struggle to earn a living in postwar Europe, has only time for "car." "Elevator" takes the place of "lift," and the humble "tram" is elongated into a "trolley car." He even clings to the old-fashioned "gotter" for "got," regardless of the fate which overtook his countryman in England who, anxious to spend an evening with his loved one at the theater, telegraphed that he had "got ten tickets." When she appeared at the rendezvous with eight friends and relations he must have regretted the employment of an archaic diction, the only meaning of which, to an English telegraph clerk, was that the sender had "got ten tickets" for the entertainment in question. A curious illustration of the ceremonial formality of American modes of speech may be noted in the courts, where the advent of a judge or judges, heralded in brusque and businesslike Britain by a curt "Court," is honored by an official proclaiming "The Honorable the District Court of the United States," or a no less impressive equivalent.—T. B. Simpson, in Scribner's.

CHANCES GREATER

Student—Do you know, professor, statistics show your chances of a long life are greater than those of a blacksmith?

Professor—Naturally; I deal only with the heads, not the heels of mules.

Ann Arbor—Plans under way for erecting new museum at University of Michigan at cost of $900,000.

"Steel of the Finest, Bright and Blue!"

We buy our axes, hatchets, hammers, etc., from manufacturers who have built a world-wide reputation for their product by making honest goods.

Don't try to save 10 or 20 cents on an axe, a hatchet or a hammer, but when you buy consider QUALITY.

We don't make much on this kind of merchandise, but you can bank on it that the steel in these tools is the right stuff, and the helms are of the best thoroughly seasoned wood obtainable, and they are beautifully fashioned.
