Fireproof Fish
 A new shipment of fireproof fish, or "desert minnows," has just been received at San Francisco. The type thrives in southern California and Mexico, getting their name from the fact that they abound in hot water springs. Part of the shipment received was found disintegrating in water that was 120 degrees in temperature.

Electricity in Far East
 The spread of electric power lines through parts of the Far East is creating business in electric fans and heaters among Chinese, Russians, Afghans, Indians and other peoples. Germany gets most of this business because of long-term credits she allows. The United States stands second in this distribution.

Irish Cling to Old Sport
 Fox hunting in Ireland has been unaffected by the change in Irish government. The transfer of the land to the ownership of the farmers has not interfered with the sport, and the relations between the people and the members of the hunts which use their lands is cordial than while landlordism existed. Each county has its hunt club, and the office of master of fox hounds is much coveted.

Valuable New Metals
 Ludovico Dalferio, an engineer in Italy, is said to have discovered two new minerals containing silver, gold and platinum in a colloidal state. He named them dalferio and auroplatinumite. The minerals he says, are abundant in Italy, and he can produce from them at a reasonable cost between 1 and 2 per cent of gold, 25 per cent silver and a considerable amount of platinum. Dick's Tomorrow Came
 By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)
 "BROKEN your engagement to Dick?" repeated Mrs. Merton, with a long searching look at her daughter.

"There was an almost inaudible 'yes' and then silence on the part of the girl at the window.

"Would you like to tell me about it, Helen?"

Helen shrugged her shoulder. "Any- one might guess so. It is Dick's habit of taking the little end of things in such a cheerful way. At the office, for instance, he will not push himself toward a better position. He always says, 'I'll just plug along—my turn will come tomorrow.' Yesterday it seems that Mr. Franklin suddenly resigned his position as head of that department, and Arnold Smith walked right into the president's office and asked for the job and got it. Dick just eddily poked along, never thought of asking for the advancement, thought it was a fine chance for Arnold Smith! When I scolded him about it he merely laughed and said the same old thing."

"That his turn would come tomorrow?"

"Yes, then—one word led to another—and I told him I would not marry a man who did not recognize an opportunity when he saw it—and so I ended it."

"Yes, dear, you ended your engagement for the same reason that you blamed Dick? You could not see and recognize an opportunity to hold the love of a mighty fine man with a great future?"

Helen, unconvinced, went upstairs to prepare for her afternoon bridge party. Dick had gone out of her life, she did not realize what had happened.

"It's a wonderful thing for Arnold," said his sister, Freda Smith, "an increase of a thousand a year out of a clear sky—though he did ask for it! Mr. Blake told him that they were going to offer the vacancy to him."

"Helen, I should think Dick Lang deserved promotion if anyone did," ejaculated tactless Beth Blake. "Dick has worked there for years longer than Arnold. I told Dad my opinion last night, and he only laughed and said that Dick would have his promotion some day! I like Dick—he is a dear, and if he was not your property, Helen, I would snipe upon him more sweetly than I do now."

It was rather an unhappy summer for Helen Merton. After awhile the news of the broken engagement leaked out, and Helen saw Beth Blake subsequently focus her attention upon Dick Lang. Dick must be working very hard this summer for he looked rather thin and worn, but Helen only met him face to face once, and then his greeting was gruffly courteous. He was seen driving Beth Blake in his shabby little car, and Mrs. Blake was quoted as saying that "Dick was a rising young man."

Then one night the blow fell. Merton sat down at the dinner table one August evening and glanced toward his wife. "They say young Lang has lost his position," he said.

"Oh, James, I am so sorry. Poor Dick has worked so hard!" Helen could listen to no more. With a murmured excuse she escaped to the old garden which had known all her joys and all her sorrows. She went to the very end where the gate opened into the orchard and discovered that her heart was racing madly. Poor old Dick and his never-to-be-realized "tomorrow"! She was bowed with shame over her treatment of him. Through her tears, she glimpsed the blurred outlines of the old Lang house where Dick lived with his parents. She wanted to run over there as she had done in the past happy years—she wanted to tell Dick she was sorry he had lost his position and if he still loved her she still wanted to marry him and together they would make a future!

She was half way through the orchard when she saw him coming, and she ran to meet him with wet eyes and outstretched hands.

"Oh, Dick, Dick, father has told me, and I am so sorry."

Dick took her hands and locked down at her very tenderly. "What did they tell you, Helen?"

"That you'd lost your position."

"They are saying the same thing all over town," he acknowledged.

Somewhat the incoherent words tumbled from her lips, were at last whispered brokenly on Dick's broad breast.

"And so you are willing to help me out of nothing?"

He asked at last, "Helen, are you willing to tie yourself to a man without a future?"

"We will have each other, Dick, and we will be happy together."

Mexican Used Prize Ring for Sprinting

So successful was Jim Jeffries in his first ring battles, that his reputation and his mere presence in the ring nearly frightened to death one of his early opponents, Mexican Pete Everett, of Cripple Creek. "Mexican Pete must have had nerve of some sort," writes Robert Edgren in an article in Liberty, "to be considered a hard citizen in Cripple Creek; but when he ran his eyes over Jeffries, in the opposite corner, his nerve wilted.

"At the bell, Pete leaped from his corner and began running around and around the ring while Jeffries stood and watched him. Jeffries swung in after him as he went by, missed, and started in pursuit. Jeff managed to get near enough to graze Pete's back hair with a swinging blow. Pete dived to the floor and took a nine-second count. He got up running, with Jeff after him.

"Cripple Creek at least gave Pete a pair of good legs and plenty of wind, for he ducked and ran and took nine-second counts until the third round. Here Pete stopped, stuck his head out between the ropes, and offered Jeffries no proper target to hit at.

"As Pete refused to turn around, the police stopped the bout. His seconds pulled him into the ring, and, seeing the affair was over, Pete recovered assurance enough to start for the dressing room."

"Albatross" Glider

A new type of glider, or motorless airplane, is under construction in Berlin. It is intended to imitate as closely as possible the structure and soaring action of large birds, such as the albatross, and has as one of its patented features joints in its wings, which permit radical changes in the positions of the outer half of their length. It will be much larger than the earlier gliders, comparing in size with the average motorized monoplane.—Exchange.
