SAFETY IN CHECKS

One of the subjects most prolific in the way of texts for comment is that of the safety provided by banks to persons to engage in financial transactions of any kind. Many more persons should adopt the plan of making payments by checks instead of incurrency.

adopt the plan of making payments by checks instead of incurrency.

Every few days the newspapers publish accounts of thefts which have been committed in cases of persons who withdraw sums of money from the banks, or use money they have kept in their homes for payments on properly or other transactions.

A bank check eliminates all possibility of loss of money in making payments. Bankers are particular to know that persons presenting checks for payment are entitled to the money, and even if a check is stolen it is highly improbable that it can be negotiated by the thief. Banks require identification before making payment on checks, and the writer of the check can immediately stop payment on it if it is stolen.

Persons who keep money in the home do so at their own risk. Wouldbe thieves have means of securing information which may not be suspected by the person who keeps money in is home, or they may even take a chance of finding currency hidden around the house. The resulting loss is the same!

the same There is no reason why an individual should draw currency from the bank when a bank will complete a financial transaction; neither is there any excuse for a person who receives money undertaking to be his own banker.

Early Envelopes

Envelopes are believed to have been first used in the reign of Louis XIV of France. It is recorded that at that time boxes were placed at the street corners of Paris for the reception of letters wrapped up in envelopes, which were sold at offices established for the purpose, says the Manchester (England) Guardian. The first machine for making envelopes was invented by Edwin Hill. an Englishman. In the early days of the envelope in England many commercial firms objected to its use, contending that the envelope would be thrown away and all trace of posting lost. Clerks were instructed to pin to all letters the envelopes in which they were received.

aside; the money wist necessary, and sike knew that she was a better wage-carner than he. Then came good news. The friendity voice of the form that had falled told her over the telephone that he had recommended her for a position in the same city to which he had sent Lobert. It was just the work which was a substantial to the war with the work which was substantially and the sent to the work which was heard to have a substantial to the work which was heard to have a substantial to the work which was heard to have a substantial to the work which he had won the position he went after. "Yell, Ms. Miller, I am somewhat averse to hiring women in this business. I may be old-tashloned, but I think the place for some girls—not all, of course—is in a home of their own," he said mildy. "At leagt, the men don't up and get married and leave us in the lurch. Frankly, would we be in danger of losling you!"

She started to say neglect the men don't up and get married and leave us in the lurch. Frankly, would we be in danger of losling you!"

She started to say here a great part of the men don't up and get married and leave us in the lurch. Frankly, would we be in danger of losling you!"

She started to say here a great part was a memorantum toward him, "I forgot, We have already hired a young man for the position—Air. Robert Ames."

She gasped, and he looked up. "Do you know him?" he asked.

Ames,"
She gasped, and he looked up. "Do you know him?" he asked.
"He is—he is—yes, I know him," she added waveringly.

"Perhaps you would like to see him," the man said in his quick way, and he pressed a button.

A moment later Robert stepped in to stop and stare at her. Then the glad lovelight shone in his eyes.
"Why. Avery, you."

io stop and stare at her. Then the glad lovelight shown in his cyes. "Why, Avery, you-"
She was conscious of a number of things—that the manager had stepped softly out, that she was weary, that here was the one who loved her. He gathered her in his arms. "You get your the from old Blake and so did I! I'll bet the old fellow put his triend here onto us in bopes they could push us into matrimony. So he turned you down, did he? Well, and, we will be a so that gently. "I guess—guess I don't want one-except keeping a home for you." But it is all the haft wishingted in a voice so glad with sudden by that tears cape and with sudden by that tears cape into her cyes are lifted her lips for his kiss. "You mean it? Then here's a dream come true!"
