The Peacemaker
Baby

By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

MURVIN JONES, millionaire, went to a hairdresser's to have his hair cut. Having been operated upon for the hair he thought he would go to the extravagance of having his nails manicured.

"Miss Camberwell," said the manageress of the manicure room, "will you please attend to this gentleman?" The name of the young woman who was assigned to him gave old Murvin a mental jolt. He looked at her keenly across the little table while she prosecuted her professional ministrations and tried to keep up, mechanically, the chatter all manicure girls are supposed to reel off.

"What part of the country are you from?" he asked abruptly.

"New England," she replied—and named a small manufacturing town in that section.

"Any relation of Roger Camberwell?" asked Murvin.

"He was my father," replied the young woman looking at the old man with inquiring eyes. "Did you know him?"

"Hum! Yes, slightly," hesitated the millionaire. "He's dead, I believe?"

"Yes, sir," said Miss Camberwell. "He died five years ago."

Murvin asked no further questions; the operation went on in silence—and the millionaire paid his ticket and went off, leaving no tip and not even saying "good-by."

All the way to his gorgeous palace of a house off Fifth avenue, where the childless widower lived alone with a spinster sister, the man of millions was in deep thought. So that was what Roger Camberwell's daughter had come to, was it? Well, he did not wonder. Roger never was a business man. If he had been—well, if he had been, perhaps Murvin Jones would not have had as much money as he had now.

He took up his library telephone and half an hour later a young man reported to him for orders. It was the young man's business to find out things for people who could pay. The next evening the young man made his report: "Bertha Camberwell, manufacturer. Small salary. Lives in cheap boarding house. Is twenty-four years old. Engaged to Roscoe Palmer, aged twenty-six, formerly in office of the Marquand Canning company. Now out of a job because of dissolution of firm. Too poor to get married."

"I don't know why I feel this way about that girl," thought Murvin. "As to my cheating her father, that's nonsense. True, I might have kept her firm going, but Roscoe would always have been a drag. Never made a success with him in the game. What could I do but squeeze him out? Foundation of my fortunes? Yes; but it couldn't be helped. Roger was hopeless."

A few days later Bertha received a letter from Murvin, brutally direct and offering her monetary assistance as "a friend of her family." She sent back an indignant refusal of Murvin's assistance. She would "accept no help from the man who had ruined her father." Old Murvin's ire rose. "She's got about as much money-sense as her father," he stormed. "Am I going to be defied by a silly girl?"

To her surprise when Bertha told Roscoe of her refusal of the millionaire's offer he did not show the enthusiasm she had expected. "Perhaps you did right," said he, "but I do hate to see you working the way you do. And I can't seem to get a job anywhere."

A week later Roscoe blew in like an elated whirlwind. "Got the best job I ever had in my life," he announced. "Confidential man for Houghton, Carstairs & Co. Sent for me! Said they had heard of the good work I did with the canning company. Got a three years' contract. Glad you rejected old man Jones' offer. He and his money can go to Jericho. You resign your position the first thing tomorrow morning. And now name the day, old girl!"

And Bertha named the day. Roscoe had been in the employ of Houghton, Carstairs & Co. for a year, and there was a little stranger in the cradle at home, before he found out that the backer of the firm—the man who, secretly, furnished the funds for its successful operation—was Murvin Jones. This excited his suspicions, he managed to worm out of one of the partners that it was owing to Murvin that he had been taken into the firm's employ. "So the old geezer had his way about helping Bertha out all right," thought he. When he went home that night he told Bertha. Bertha thought deeply for a minute and then looking at the sleeping baby, said: "Let us forgive him—for baby's sake, Roscoe. If he could only see baby now!"

And the next day he wrote a note to Murvin stating he had just become aware of the fact that he owed his position to the said Mr. Jones—and thanking him for the interest he had taken in his welfare. Also he extended the thanks of Mrs. Roscoe—and mentioned the baby!

Old Murvin checked. "Didn't get the best of me, did she?" he laughed. And then he went to see the baby and started a bank account for that infant wonder. He insisted, however, on choosing one of the names by which the baby was christened—and that is why the son of Roscoe and Bertha was baptized as Roscoe Peacemaker Palmer.

New Jersey he adopted an eye test for motorists. Wonder if it is something that will keep a fellow's eyes glued to the road while passing a pretty dame in short skirts.

Governor Fred W. Green expresses surprise at the number of people seeking state jobs. Don't get discouraged, Governor. Just wait till the returns from the faithful are all in.

"qualities of endurance once undreamed-of in a car of the thousand dollar class"

In completing its famous 100,000-mile treadmill run in less than six months without the failure of any vital part, the Greater Oakland displayed qualities of endurance once undreamed-of in a car of the thousand dollar class!

Yet, dramatic as was this publicly conducted test, it only proved what thousands upon thousands of owners already know: that the Greater Oakland Six is winning and holding good will!

Oakland Six, $1025 to $1295. The New and Finer Pontiac Six—at New Low Prices—$775 to $975. Bodies by Fisher. All prices at factory. Easy to pay on the General Motors Time Payment Plan.

—not so much by the superlative beauty of its Fisher Bodies, nor by the marked advantages of Oakland's advanced engineering, but by its long life and dependability that have been demonstrated under every conceivable condition of use!

And as a result, all over America the Greater Oakland Six is establishing levels of owner satisfaction that have never been reached by any other car of comparable price!
