His Fictitious Wife

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyrighted)

DOCTOR BRUCE, when he took over the big practice in Glen Cove, felt that he simply must have a wife—not a wife in fact but a wife in fiction—one that dwelt on the fringe of the world. An unmarried doctor was inclined to lose out among certain patients.

The brilliant idea of having a fictitious wife came to him like an inspiration and so simple it was that he fell into it like a duck to water. The story was rapidly written and that Mrs. Bruce was compelled to live in a higher altitude than Glen Cove and the tale was so plausible that no one, not even the servants in the house, doubted it.

These false matrimonial colors had been flying some two years and Doctor Bruce found himself giving natural reports of his wife to the many patients interested and felt no guilty qualms of conscience whatever. He realized that his patients thought far more of him as a married man and told him their innermost secrets with great freedom than they ever would have had he been single.

There was old Mrs. Kent who sympathized with him so keenly about his wife's health and took so much interest that she insisted on seeing a photograph of Mrs. Bruce and the doctor.

This was all very simple until Doctor Bruce was called in suddenly to Mrs. Kent—who lived all alone well out in the country—in the middle of the night and there he met his Waterloo—as it were.

There had been nothing in the past to suggest that Mrs. Kent had been deliberate in waiting for her doctor the fact that she had a niece and that Flory Hall was the most exquisite niece that anyone ever had. She had come for a visit with her aunt and been taken ill immediately after her arrival.

She was tossing about with scarlet cheeks and flame-like eyes when Doctor Bruce arrived and her temperature was quite high enough to have alarmed Mrs. Kent.

The temperature of Flory didn't alarm Doctor Bruce half so much as the sudden and devastating wretch that he himself seemed to have become. He knew now why his heart had remained so utterly unmoved hitherto by anything feminine. This tremendous thing had leaped upon him, as surely a thing of flame as the fever in Flory's eyes. Flory's fever would be quite overcome.

"Then it's just the flu," sighed Mrs. Kent in relief. "I was afraid it might be brain fever or nervous prostration. Her mother has sent her on to visit me in order to break up an unapproved love affair. I was fearful the worry might—"

"Nothing to worry about, Mrs. Kent—we'll see that this lovely niece of yours doesn't throw herself away on some worthless chap."

When he had made Flory as comfortable as possible and given her instructions to her aunt, Doctor Bruce reluctantly departed.

There was no slightest doubt that the doctor had got himself in a fine kettle of fish with his false marriage tales. And the point was would anyone ever believe him again? He could hardly kill off his supposed wife, and if he informed people of a divorce they would probably give him up as their doctor. Besides the One Girl would no doubt object to a divorced man to replace that other lover.

Flory responded with flattering speed to the doctor's care and had he not supposed his married wife had acted just as swiftly in the matter of—well—perhaps a love affair. As it was, she had many moments when the look in his eyes swept away all feeling that he was the husband of another woman and that she herself was supposed to be suffering from a disappointing love experience.

Two weeks fled quickly by and more and more the doctor realized that something must be done to ease the situation in which his folly had plunged him. Certainly he was in love with Flory. Of that there was no doubt. And, what was more, he intended to marry her and the sooner it happened the better.

Before Flory ventured out after her illness Doctor Bruce asked Mrs. Kent to come for a short drive with him. When they had got to a bit of clear road, Doctor Bruce turned to Mrs. Kent.

Revolt in Poorhouse Over Tobacco Ration

Truly Dickensian scenes took place in the poorhouse at West Ham, where, according to the London Times, "a revolt of the inmates was precipitated" by a refusal of the guardians to increase the weekly tobacco ration from one ounce to an ounce and a half.

Evidence was given by a Mr. Steele, the assistant labor master at the house, that after all lights had been extinguished in one of the dormitories they were suddenly turned on again and "everybody" started singing. A number of officers went to the dormitory and found the doors barricaded.

Suddenly the upstairs windows were opened and tea mugs, mats, bowls and all kinds of crockery were thrown into the yard. Demands to open the door were met with "boos" and the master and the police were sent for and several were arrested.

An elderly inmate of the dormitory said that "old Wiley and Scrubbs" had been causing the trouble. Police witnesses stated that they found "the whole place upside down and the fire hose had been put into play."

SWEET GIFT

"It was so nice of you to bring me these beautiful pressed flowers" from abroad. Such a sweet gift. "I preserved them for you, you know."

Americans Eat Too Much

Shortly before Uncle Joe Cannon's death, writes Arthur Brisbane in Capper's Weekly, his doctor said of him, "His is the condition of a man ninety years of age. Naturally you can see that the end is growing nearer." There is no reason why death should be near at ninety years or at one hundred.

If men ate and lived wisely during the first forty years, the twenty years from eighty to one hundred would be their best. Luigi Corvaro, who said, "I had to live to be ninety to know that the world is beautiful," knew how to eat little. Not one American in 1,000 knows that.

Schools in Moving Cars

Working in conjunction with the railways, the Ontario government is planning to put into operation railway cars to be used as classrooms of that province. The cars will be fitted with the most modern school room equipment and will provide living quarters for the teacher who will periodically visit at such places as the children of a district could, with reasonable convenience, congregate.

Aid in Preaching

Two colored men down in the border towns of southern Indiana were bewailing the hard times being felt in the agricultural districts there.

"Times is tighter than I ever seen them before," said one, "I can't even get hold of a nickel! If something don't turn up I'm going to start preaching again. I done that once and I ain't too good to do it again."

Many respectable folks are not good, and just as many good folks are not considered respectable.

It will probably be hard to convince either Mr. Coffey or Mr. Johnson that the office of state superintendent of instruction has finally been taken out of politics.

President Coolidge was right when he decided the McNary-Haugen bill did not jibe with "Michigan, Down on the Farm."

In the Morning tabernacle at Salt Lake City one can hear a pin drop. A local minister tells us that in his church you can't hear a coin drop.

Perhaps a pin hear is the chap who can remember when the town drunkard was the only native in the settlement who toted a hip flask.

Who, can say that the radio program is not right up to the minute? They even start their bedtime stories for the kids at nine-thirty each night.

Give your farm a chance—its profit-producing powers will astonish you

ANY soil will produce some kind of crop, but when it's given a real chance, when it's properly fertilized, it comes back with profit-making yields that fatten the bank balance and make farming a paying business.

For over 60 years "AA Quality" Fertilizers have been piling up unequalled crop records—on all crops, hereabouts and everywhere. Thousands of testimonials from farmers prove this.

The superiority of "AA Quality" Fertilizers begins with the selection of the world's best raw materials.

Only materials from the most carefully selected sources are used in the manufacture of these famous fertilizers. They are thoroughly blended—cured—and then screened. That's why they are always in perfect mechanical condition and why they produce such satisfactory and profitable crops for farmers everywhere.

Give your farm a chance to work for you—use "AA Quality" Fertilizers.
