Too Early to Laugh at Woman Explorer

A group of German scientists recently drank a toast "to the first woman to reach the North or South pole." Accounts of the incident indicate that it may have been something of an ambiguous academic joke, for Germany, it is said, in spite of its numerous exceptions, still clings to the theory that the Frau's place is in the haus.

Annie Peck, in 1908, climbed to a mountainous altitude never before reached by man. Gertrude Ederle, in swimming the English channel, broke all male records made before her plunge. Mrs. Delia Akeley has roamed the African jungles and Mrs. Marguerite Harrison has made her perilous trek of the Baktihri tribes. In fact, women have so heartily entered the field of exploration that the newly formed Society of Woman Geographers already has a membership of twenty-two.

That they have so far overlooked the Arctic regions means little. There is time. German scientists who toast up their sleeves would do well to conceal the fact. They may yet have their high hats knocked off by a snowball thrown from the North pole by a woman. —New York Evening Post.

WE STILL HAVE THE TUNE

He (sadly)—There's nothing left in this land of home, sweet home. She—Oh, yes—we still have the tune.

Was a Jockey at 75

Probably the only jockey who has ever reached the age of one hundred, John Faulkner of Berkshire, England, is proud of a number of records. He has had practically every bone in his body broken at some time or other—the last being three years ago, when he was thrown from a horse and broke his thigh; he was at work till he was ninety; and he is the father of 32 children. He received six cents when he rode his first race at Epsom, and rode his last mount when he was seventy-five years old. He paid a visit to Ascot a few years ago, but he was so disgusted with the present style of riding that he left the track after the first race. —Kansas City Star.
