OAKLAND CAR CONQUERS

TORTUOUS MULE TRAIL

Nerve, backbone, daring, have usually been regarded the traditional heritage of man. Miss Billy Twist of Tulsa, Okla., recently challenged this idea with a thrill all her own when she startled natives of Colorado by driving her Oakland Six Sport Roadster down the precipitous mule trail to the bottom of Box Canyon, a popular scenic spot near Manitou.

The drive down the tortuous, twisting, mule trail, a route used by tourists and thrill-seekers on mule back, required half a day. The return was even more difficult than the descent, Miss Twist says.

"I was surprised when I was told by a man, whom his acquaintances said was a hermit, that my car was the first one he ever saw at the bottom," she said. Others had attempted, they told me, but gave it up before they reached half way."

The drive was dangerous in spots, the Tulsa girl admits, but said she was not afraid because her brother, Ed Twist, also of Tulsa, and a boy friend from Ada accompanied her.

FARMINGTON BEATEN 7-2

On Friday, April 29, the local high school team met Dearborn High at the home field, and was beaten by a score of 7 to 2. The score does not tell the whole story, however.

G. Rosenboom, in the box for Farmington, pitched a masterful game, allowing but four hits, striking out eight men, and walking three. The Dearborn scores practically resulted from errors, of which eight were made.

McKay, a "southpaw," pitched the game for Dearborn. He showed to be very weak in some places, and the failure of the home team to win was not because of particular effectiveness by the Dearborn pitcher, but rather because of failure to hit in the pinches.

Hitting on the whole was weak, except for one bright spot, a nice double by E. Rosenboom. This was the best acquired by Farmington, it being a long hit to left that would have been a triple, and possibly a home run on any other field. The ground rules, however, held it to a double.

Dear Sir:

We are great believers in long distance service, especially so during the winter months when our customers are unable to travel the territory on account of snow and ice, and, of course, the winter months are our big months, and without long distance service, we know our business would suffer materially.

During the time prices are changing, we can cover, at least, twenty five customers out of town on the Long Distance 'phone, whereas if we were to depend upon personal calls, we would not be able to get in touch with even half this amount.

Yours truly,
